Lafene privilege fee passes Student Senate

■ Heinrich expected to veto bill before Monday; legislation passed 38-10-1 on Thursday.

By DANEDRI THOMPSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate voted, under the threat of a veto from Student Body President Jason Heinrich, to raise privilege fees about $6 to fund Lafene Health Center next year at its meeting Thursday night.

"I will veto any bill that does not include $4 user fee," Heinrich said.

After the meeting, Heinrich said he wasn't certain if he would veto the bill.

"I have a hard time thinking everyone understands the impact of a decision of this magnitude," he said.

Senate also worked under deadline pressure knowing that all decisions for this fiscal year had to be made and sent to the Kansas Board of Regents by Monday for approval.

Senators voted three times on the same bill, failing it the first two times. Senate only passed it after Steve Hall, Academic Affairs and University Relations chair, changed the proxy vote of Agricultural Sen. Matt Wolters from against the measure to in favor of it.

If Heinrich vetoes the bill, the decision of how to fund Lafene will go to the administration. Usually Senate would be able to override a presidential veto with a two-thirds vote, but because final decisions must be made by Monday for approval by the Kansas Board of Regents, the decision will be taken out of senators' hands.

"You haven't seen volatile yet until you go out there and tell students that you've given all the student power to the administration," Hall said.

"Don't sit there and pretend to represent students and then let (Bob) Krause tell students how they're going to spend the biggest part of their privilege fees," he said of the vice president of institutional advancement.

Throughout the meeting, which concluded at 2 a.m., a majority of Senators voted in favor of funding Lafene without a per-visit user fee, but in order to raise privilege fees to do so, the bill had to pass Senate with a two-thirds vote.

The original bill, which did not pass and was written by the Privilege Fee Committee, would have instituted an $8 user fee per office visit to the health center. It was amended later in the meeting into its current form that will use privilege fees to fund Lafene.

and institute a user fees between $4 and $8 per visit, Senate passed the bill without privilege fees 38-10-1.

Bill Muir, faculty representative to Senate, said after the meeting, "We've never had three votes on the same bill on the same night."

Both Jason Lance, Student Health Advisory Committee chairman, and Gretchen Holden, K-State director of disability services, spoke negatively to senators about the original legislation that would have instituted $8 per office visit user fees.

Lance said the bill would keep people from going to Lafene and damage the health of the entire K-State community.

"You as SGA have a responsibility to the students here that they can continue to stay here without interest to health issues," Lance said. "A sick person doesn't just affect themselves. The longer they stay sick the more they can infect other people."

Holden said that after hearing some of the students who visit her office talk about the possible office fee, she had to speak against the bill.

"These students have ill health. They feel lousy a lot of the time," she said. "They're not able to work. They put all of their energy into staying healthy enough to be students."

She also said there are more than just a few students with long-term illnesses or disabilities that would be affected by the bill.

"I only know 100 of them, but there's more here," she said. "Believe me they're all here. Allow them to use Lafene as they do now. You've got a great facility. Let's keep it as it is now."

She told senators there is a difference between charging a user fee for some things and charging a user fee for health services.

"User fees to the zoo are one thing. You can choose to go or not," she said. "When you're talking about you're health, the health of this entire community, you want your fellow students to go for help."

Fatal Fire

Thursday morning house fire kills 1; crews search for other victims

A house fire 10 miles north of Manhattan killed one person Thursday morning, and officials still have not heard from the owners of the burned property.

Firefighters found the body of a man in what appeared to be the bedroom of the house, Riley County Fire Chief Pat Collins, said.

Jack and Betty Peterson own the house, but authorities do not yet know whether the recovered body is that of Jack Peterson.

The body was taken to the county coroner's office, Peterson Clinical Laboratories, which was founded by Jack Peterson. His daughter now is the county coroner and in charge of the office that will identify the remains, Collins said.

Collins said fire investigators still are in the process of searching for other victims and trying to determine the cause of the fire. They have, however, ruled out any foul play.

"We're digging through the debris," he said. "We've got to go inch by inch."

Although fire crews were salvaged some clothing, books and other memorabilia, he said the house was completely devastated by the fire.

Collins said the fire probably started in the west end of the house and then followed air flow throughout the rest of the house, seeking doors and windows.

Fire trucks arrived at the scene at about 1 a.m. Thursday after a neighbor called 911.

Six fire crews, including crews from Keats, Tatterax, Tuttle Cove, Hunter's Island and Blue River Hills, battled the fire for about six hours.

He said one problem in fighting the fire was that the nearest water source was a tower a few miles away. He said the crews had five trucks hauling water constantly for six hours. They used 59,000 gallons of water, half of which came from

"It would have burned clear to the ground if it hadn't have been for a neighbor who called and said he saw a glow," Collins said.

He said when they arrived, there were still walls standing, but fire crews could see clear through the entire house.

Professor loses battle to cancer

By GINA KOHAKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Donald Adamchak, professor of sociology, died Thursday morning after battling brain cancer for the past year.

He is survived by his wife, Susan Adamchak, an adjunct faculty member in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, and their son, who lives in Louisville, Ky.

Adamchak also has family in New Jersey, including his father and sisters.

Adamchak attended Bowling Green State University in Bowling Green, Ohio, where he received his Ph.D. After graduating in 1978, he came to K-State to teach in the sociology, anthropology and social work department.

He taught a range of classes including some Introduction to Sociology sections, Population Dynamics and Social Demography, a graduate-level course.

Aside from teaching, Adamchak published many articles, including, "Population Aging in Sub-Saharan Africa: the Effects of Development on the Elderly," in scholarly journals concerning aging and rural sociology.

Leonard Bloomquist, associate professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, said Adamchak was a fellow co-worker and a friend.

"He was a good person who worked hard and was a productive scholar," he said. "He was a wonderful, caring mentor for his students and fellow staff members."

Services will take place during the week after spring break. Further details are unavailable at this time.

Increase in voters, fewer violations highlight elections

By REED DUNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The number of voters was up and the number of violations was down in the 2000 student body elections.

Travis Morgan, Student Senate elections chair, said the Student Governing Association elections were successful even with the changes in the voting process. He said online voting brought in a large number of votes from off-campus students.

"With online voting, off-campus students are more likely to vote," he said. "The online process gave off-campus students the access they deserve."

Morgan said off-campus student voting in the past has not been high. This year, more than 45 percent of the votes came from this group.

"The Union and residence halls were main locations in the past," Morgan said. "This year, voting could happen anywhere."

Jeff Meder, Elections Committee member, said he thought online voting worked well for students.

"I think it worked very well, and I was happy with the turnout," he said. "The increase in voters from last year was something like 28 percent, and that speaks for itself."

Chris McKinney, committee member, said online voting was something candidates might not have been prepared to campaign against and is something he thinks candidates will consider in the future.

"It may force the candidates to revise some of the campaigning techniques on campus," he said.

Another improvement was the decrease in campaign citations issued. The number of citations dropped from 54 last year to 32 this year. Morgan said the committee worked hard to explain problems with last year's campaign, hoping to avoid problems this year. He said the committee also patrolled target areas where violations are likely to occur.

Kidnapping suspect under suicide watch while in jail

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — An unemployed man suspected of snatching a 10-year-old girl from her driveway and holding her for three days was ordered held on $1 million bail while under a suicide watch Thursday.

James P. Johnson, 38, said only, "Good morning, your honor," during a video court appearance on a charge of kidnapping of a child for the purpose of committing sexual acts.

He allegedly abducted Jessica Rodriguez on March 6 after she got off a school bus. She later was released outside a Wal-Mart 25 miles from her home.

Johnson checked himself into a mental health center earlier this week and was arrested there Wednesday.

Defense attorney Thomas Kurrus asked Judge Yselta McDonald to order his client held at the mental-health facility and not in jail. He said Johnson suffers from recurrent depression.

The judge denied the request but ordered jailers to keep Johnson in a cell by himself under a 24-hour suicide watch.

If convicted of kidnapping, Johnson could face life in prison without parole. Police also have charged Johnson with sexual battery on a person under the age of 11. Prosecutor Rod Smith said he had not yet decided whether he will prosecute that charge.

Jessica is in good condition and has been returned to her family near Trenton. Their house is about 30 miles from Johnson's home in Gainesville.

Investigators searched his home and seized his green Jeep Cherokee, which they said matches the description of the vehicle used in the kidnapping. Jessica picked him out of a photo lineup, Smith said.

In most cases, The Associated Press does not identify victims or alleged victims of sexual assault. In this case, however, the name of the girl had been widely used because of the circumstances of her abduction.

Johnson, a divorced father of three young girls who lived with him, has no criminal record, authorities said.

Sheriff Stephen Oelrich said, a woman came forward and pointed investigators toward Johnson. He said the woman described both his car and his home.

Boy's arm reattached after mauling by tiger in Houston

HOUSTON — Surgeons reattached a 3-year-old boy's arm Thursday after it was bitten off by his uncle's pet Bengal tiger when the child reached into the animal's cage.

Surgeon Dr. Mark H. Henry said Jayton Tidwell will never have full use of the limb, but he should be able to move on and live a normal life.

Jayton, whose arm was ripped off Wednesday between the shoulder and elbow, underwent nine hours of surgery at Memorial Hermann Children's Hospital.

He was in serious condition Thursday and should be hospitalized at least a week, Henry said.

Doctors worried that bacteria from the tiger's mouth might infect the wound or that blood clotting could complicate the reattachment.

The Bengal tiger was kept in the back yard of the boy's uncle, Larry Tidwell, in a working-class and industrial section east of Houston.

The animal attacked when the child stuck his arm through a gap in its chain-link cage, authorities said.

Neighbor Tracy Olivas, who called the tiger a really nice and passive animal, said she rushed from her home when she heard Jayton's scream.

While Olivas' husband and Tidwell's wife coaxed the tiger to one side of the cage, Tidwell's son retrieved the boy's arm.

They packed the limb in ice, and an emergency medical team took it to the hospital with the boy.

Dr. Richard Bradley, the attending physician, said Jayton was conscious when he arrived. "He was actually doing surprisingly well," Bradley said. "He looked like a typical 3-year-old coming in on an ambulance: scared, anxious, a little tearful."

Surgery to reattach the limb began Wednesday night.

Henry said the necessary blood vessels and nerves were reconnected before a crucial six-hour window had closed.

Tidwell was cited for keeping a dangerous animal without a permit — a misdemeanor punishable by a $500 fine.

Baby abandonment. A Senate committee endorsed a bill allowing a parent to abandon a newborn baby without running afoul of the law.

The Federal and State Affairs Committee's voice vote Thursday sent the bill to the Senate for debate.

The bill would allow any newborn up to 45 days old to be dropped off at a medical care facility, fire station or health department. The child then would be turned over to local law enforcement officials.

Those dropping off a newborn at the designated sites wouldn't be charged with child abandonment if the child was turned over unharmed.

Chairman Lana Oleen, R-

Manhattan, had wanted to give parents a chance to change their minds and reclaim the child. But she said that is allowed under existing law.

Last year, the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services took in 13 abandoned children under age 1 and in 1998, six.

Loss of state aid. A House committee heard from several local government officials worried about their potential loss of state aid.

League of Kansas Municipalities and Kansas Association of Counties lobbyists, as well as some city and county officials, shared their concerns Thursday with the House Appropriations Committee.

Gov. Bill Graves recommended reducing the amount of state aid counties and cities get for fiscal year 2001, which begins July 1. The committee took no action.

Local governments use those state dollars to keep property taxes down.

In past years, the Legislature has capped the amount of state aid. For 2001, it would be cut by almost $25 million.

While a particular county's loss might only be $30,000, that could mean the delay of a bridge repair or not hiring a paramedic, Ellsworth County Commissioner Don Hanson said.

"Local governments did not make the decision to make major increased funding promises or make major tax reduction promises based on overly optimistic revenue projections," Hanson said.

"Avoid any cuts in funding that will flow through to the local level and require us to pick up the burden," he said.

For those here to read this: have safe fun

To the dozen or so students who made the trek to campus today, the Collegian would like to wish you a happy spring break.

More importantly, we also would like to wish you a safe spring break.

Whether you leave town or not, we urge you to be safe in whatever you do.

While none of us are mothers, we do have some motherly advice to offer.

If you're going to drink, drink responsibly. If you're going to drive, drive safely. And if you're going to be in the sun, wear sunscreen.

As most of you might have discovered by now, alcohol can be a lot of fun. But it also can be dangerous. Remember to use common sense before partaking, especially in strange places with people you don't know well.

Because it is a busy time of the year for travelers, be careful when you travel. Accidents are bound to happen.

Don't let your guard down when on the roads, and do wear your seatbelt. Remember to be a defensive driver, not offensive, because that is when accidents can happen.

Finally, make sure to limit your time in the sun, use the buddy system, and wear your seatbelt. Whether you're traveling the world or staying in soon-to-be peaceful Manhattan, these tips can make your spring break safer and more fun.

Spring break will provide a needed break from a long semester of classes.

Whether students use the time to party, rest or just catch up on school work, we hope everyone will come back to school refreshed and ready to tackle the final six weeks of the semester.

The Collegian's Reader Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on any topic for 20 seconds.

I was in Jeff Elliott's corner until he let the cat out of the bag about his favorite album being from the talent-less Everclear.

I think Jerry the fish is the best editorial column this year in the Collegian.

The Fourum brings out the most negative thoughts from the most negative students. Does an otherwise fine university really need this?

I'm really happy for Jake and Dana.

You people shouldn't be so quick to judge Wooldridge. He did win six championships with the Bulls. Give him some space — let him do what he can do.

I think Max Urlick needs to go, too.

The Jerry Fushnickens column was the stupidest, most idiotic thing I have ever heard.

Worcester is lucky this election wasn't in another week. Notice how his support was declining.

I'm just happy we get to pay for another losing basketball coach.

I think David Levin, if he is going to use big words, should find out what they mean first.

I'm curious as to why the Collegian has not covered any of the presidential campaigning. I think it is an important issue that concerns the campus, and there needs to be much more coverage.

For sale — some shirts. Some names on them. Cheap.

I have an idea for a big change. Let's be nice for a while.

I think we should all give old Jimmy a chance to prove himself before we all trash him.

You don't get to be an NBA coach if you suck.

I think we should get rid of the Campus Fourum because it has done nothing but negative things for our university.

Yeah, there's an error in the line schedule. I don't think Thomas Asbury is going to be coaching Intercollegiate Basketball next fall.

This is for all of you idiots out there complaining about a coach without a winning record: shut up and give him a chance!

Ali, Dave: Thank you for showing Roney that the majority of the world is not Christian.

This is to the basketball player that was whining in the Fourum yesterday: Maybe if you guys would actually run an offense, maybe you would be fun to watch.

I'd like to make a motion to have the Fourum moved to the front page, so I don't actually have to pick up the Collegian.

I don't know about the rest of you all, but I'm getting the hell out of here.

STOPPING the violence

Petition highlights need for increased awareness of violence toward women

My high school English teacher often spoke of the importance of having sex only with someone you cared about.

This involved sex with emotions and feelings. She explained that it was a process that involved giving yourself to someone special. The act was supposed to be a sacred bond.

But that bond wasn't so sacred. It took an unfortunate incident that happened to a friend for me to realize that sex isn't always how my teacher described it. My friend opened my eyes to the fact that sex isn't always a two-way street.

According to the April issue of Marie Claire, every two minutes a woman is raped in the United States. It is estimated that more than 300,000 women in this country are raped every year.

There are reasons why the numbers have to be estimated. Some of the reported cases are fictitious. There are incidents when women feel guilty about their sexual encounters so they foolishly blow the whistle. By doing this they destroy the credibility of those who actually have been through this hell.

Another reason the number of rapes is hard to pinpoint is due to the fact that far too many women who go through the agony and the pain of rape remain silent.

The silence, the feeling of guilt that shouldn't exist and the fear of what others will think cause most women to look the other way. It causes them to cry internally, because they know it is wrong. Yet externally they are silent.

My friend asked me for advice. She told me what those three men, animals, if you will, did to her. They encouraged her to drink, and then they raped her — despite her pleading, begging for them to stop. One after another they raped her, pulled what most would call a train. A train of no respect that only brought forth pain that words cannot touch base with.

She blamed them, but even more so, she blamed herself. She blamed herself for drinking alcohol and for putting herself in the position that she did.

Regardless of those elements, when it comes down to it, she did not deserve to be raped. No matter how much she drank.

It doesn't matter what kind of clothing she was wearing. She did not deserve to be treated like a whore.

The only difference is that whores get paid, and they choose to be used. She didn't choose to be used, nor did she choose to be raped.

I encouraged her to speak out about what happened. She wanted to put those guys through only a fraction of the agony they had put her through.

She stood up and fought back. With cautious pride she fought them head on. Despite the threats from peers, the dirty looks, the name-calling and the negative attention, she pressed on.

In court she told the judge what happened. She explained what she went through that night and how her life would never be the same. The guys pleaded innocent.

The same three guys who scarred her for life are walking the streets. No jail time, no fine, not even a measly slap on the wrist. They are with the innocent. And when they walk the streets among us, they walk with their heads up. But she walks with her head down, in undeserving shame. For they have been labeled innocent, and she has been labeled anything but innocent.

You can do something to help fight violence against women with the click of a mouse and few minutes of your time. In fact, in the time it will take you to do this, one more woman in the United States will have been raped.

You can do your part by signing a petition.

This spring, Congress will vote on an act that will help promote funding and support for women who need it. In 1994, the Violence Against Women Act gave more than $1 billion to programs designed to prevent rape and curb domestic violence.

Congress is set to decide if this funding should be reauthorized for another five years.

As of Tuesday, 33,199 people have visited the Web site, www.vawact.org and signed the petition. The five-year funding will help to end violence against women and girls. It will help to stop rape and sexual assault. It will help to keep battered women's shelters open and to make homes safe for women and children.

Maybe it will do even more than what is listed above. It might make other women who have been through this torture stand up and speak out. Perhaps others will come forward and say they will not accept a slap on the wrist, or even less, for those who have brought nightmares into their lives.

You can make a difference by refusing to be silent. Don't keep looking the other way and acting like it doesn't happen, because it does.

Don't be naive and think sex is always a two-way street — we will keep hitting the same dead end.

U.S. can no longer afford to spread armed forces out; national security threatened

A crowd of tearful family members and proud fellow soldiers welcomed home nearly 100 Fort Riley soldiers early Monday morning after completing a six-month peacekeeping mission in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

VIEWPOINT
Travis WEIGEL

As protectors of the greatest nation on Earth, these soldiers — just like every other American soldier — simply were fulfilling their duty to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States from enemies, both foreign and domestic.

Who is to decide whether or not someone is an enemy and how they should be dealt with? According to the Constitution, it is the president who has the power to arrange foreign and defense policies that will help us to avoid war when possible and to win if necessary.

As a result, when the president orders the military to deploy to some far corner of the world, they deploy with no questions asked.

World War II firmly established the United States as one of the great world powers. Meanwhile, the United States' aggressive postwar foreign policy established it as a world leader.

Having fought Communism and injustice for nearly 45 years using shrewd political tactics, strategic military intervention — aside from Cuba and Vietnam — and solid alliances, by 1990, the United States found itself as the world's leading power.

As the world's single leading power, the United States was given the responsibility of being the United Nations' law-enforcement arm, whether it wanted to be or not. Unfortunately, with this new title and responsibility, the United States chose to replace its old, but solid, foreign policy with a newer, fragmented model that still is used today.

Under the direction of this new model, U.S. foreign policy ranges from overly passive — isolationistic — to overly aggressive — imperialistic — with no clear explanation as to why it chooses to recognize one country's problems while ignoring another's.

This would explain why the United States chose to bomb Kosovo while choosing to ignore the many other "Kosovos" around the world — Mexico in Chiapas, China in Tibet, Indonesia in East Timor and the Muslim separatists in northwestern Russia.

Additionally, the United States is no longer capable of carrying out and enforcing treaties or other peace accords. This is why Iraq remains a thorn in our side and a threat to the entire Mid-Eastern region. It is also why, six years after the 1994 Nuclear Accords were signed with North Korea, they still are not being carried out.

Making matters worse is that peacekeeping missions like Bosnia, Kosovo, Haiti and Somalia only wear down our already weak military.

The U.S. Army only has 10 active divisions composed of about 478,000 soldiers. Due to current foreign policy, the United States has a division committed to South Korea, Bosnia and to the Force XXI test bed — for the development of new doctrine and equipment for the future army.

This leaves only seven divisions to cover the rest of the world. With the Army and the rest of the armed forces stretched so thin now and recruitment down, it is unlikely that we could respond on our own to even one major conflict, let alone two or more.

The United States needs to wake up and realize what is going on in the world around it. With China threatening to invade Taiwan, India testing nuclear weapons, Iraq continuing its research and North Korea only steps away from developing their own nuclear weapons — if they haven't already — it is only a matter of time until another conflict breaks out. Government officials must realize we no longer can afford to have a foreign policy that spreads our armed forces so thin that national security might be threatened.

Most importantly, the United States can no longer see itself as an all-powerful and untouchable nation that can meddle in everyone's business whenever they please.

History has shown us that, when one nation becomes dominant in an international system and uses its power against the interests of other players in the system, the lesser powers will join together to thwart the dog — does Europe vs. Napoleonic France ring a bell?

Look at it this way — what if the British and French had gotten involved in the U.S. Civil War to "stop the bloodshed" and enforce a cease fire? It would have been a great humanitarian thing to do. Hundreds of thousands of lives would have been saved. The problem is that it would have led to a divided America.

The human desire to expand and lack of a coherent national philosophy might have led to more bloodshed as the various states fought for power. Instead, for good or bad, we are one nation.

Perhaps we should consider that next time we enter another sovereign nation or are awakened by the deafening roar of Fort Riley's artillery.

City passes transport plan

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan City Commission approved a transportation plan Thursday night that has given a face to the city and the university's ongoing public-transportation debate.

The plan, Manhattan Area Transportation Strategy: Connecting to 2020, passed 5-0. It was compiled by Kansas City, Mo.-based TransSystems Corp. and was nearly two years in the making. The city report was divided into chapters on numerous modes of transportation, from automobiles and bicycles to the local airport and construction on Kansas Highway 18.

The firm had worked with the city and K-State separately to address each institution's problems. The city's plan addressed its transportation future. K-State's addressed its current parking problem. As a result, parties have discussed the idea of citywide or university-wide shuttle systems.

For the city, TransSystems principal Tom Swenson said his company recommended a three-route shuttle moving in a northwest to southeast direction to link the university, the downtown area, west Fort Riley Boulevard and other areas. Need was based across the area, he said, so a fixed route seemed best.

"To some extent, it was simple as connecting the dots," he said.

According to the plan, the estimated cost would $1.3 million annually, including startup costs, if the city worked alone.

Swenson said this is not a final option, though, since later data might suggest a more efficient plan. Still, he said, a K-State partnership on some level is absolutely necessary not only to ensure there are customers for the system but to ensure someone will fund it.

Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, spoke for K-State administration as he offered a limited partnership at the meeting.

"At this time, the university believes it should use its own shuttle system," he said.

Rawson said, K-State wanted to partner with the city to seek Kansas Department of Transportation funds for an implementation study. Under the agreement that neither party be required to implement a transportation system after the study, Rawson said K-State was willing to contribute $15,000 from the City/University Tax Fund towards the endeavor.

In other business, commissioners voted unanimously to annex 47.3 acres into the city as part of the Grand Mere Development and to authorize a $38,000 contract to clean one of the city's wastewater sludge lagoons.

Wrestling team competes in Dallas national tournament

By JEFF CALDWELL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's club wrestling team finished 14th in the nation over the weekend when seven members traveled to Dallas to take part in the third annual National Collegiate Wrestling Association Championships.

The NCWA tournament featured a 33-team field that showcased some of the best collegiate wrestlers from across the nation.

K-State, who finished second in the Southwestern Conference Championships on Feb. 26, was outdone by the University of Kansas, who won the conference.

K-State and Kansas were the only teams to represent the upper midwest.

Pensacola Christian College took the overall national championship for the second season in a row.

Although the team has been in existence only for two seasons, K-State co-captain Chris Warren didn't think the team's finish was too bad.

"I don't think our finish was bad for a two-year program," Warren said.

Amidst the team's finish in the middle of the pack, two of K-State's grapplers placed in the top 10 in their weight classes.

Shawn O'Toole, freshman in open-weight, placed fifth in the 125-pound weight class and Warren, sophomore in agriculture business, placed sixth.

By placing in the national tournament, each wrestler received All-American honors for his achievements.

Warren said that even though things could have been better, he thought the team wrestled well.

"I've been training for a long time, and I wrestled the best I could have," said Warren, who just completed his first season with the club.

The trip also proved to be significant for the years to come. Head coach Harold Jagerson became the Southwest Conference chairman and K-State earned the right to host the conference tournament next season in Manhattan.

Warren expressed optimism for next year's season of competition.

"I'm looking forward to great things for next year," Warren said. "Our club is really getting stronger and gaining momentum."

Women's golf team travels to Texas Invitational

By DEREK BOSS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's golf team is venturing to Austin, Texas, for the third consecutive year for the Betsy Rawls Invitational.

The meet will start today and run through Sunday, with 18 holes played each day of the tourney.

The Wildcats are coming off a 10th-place finish at the GTE Mo'Morial March 6-7 in nearby Houston.

The Austin tournament features a 13-team field, consisting of six Big 12 Conference teams, Texas, Missouri, Baylor, Nebraska, Colorado and K-State.

Head coach Kristi Knight said she sees the meet as a challenge, as the Cats face perhaps their most strenuous competition of the season.

"It's a good event — one of the most prestigious — but this is one of the toughest fields we've played in," Knight said. "From top to bottom, it's a really good field."

In addition to the Big 12's presence at the meet, Texas Christian and New Mexico State, two of the top teams in the nation, will join the other top names in the field.

The Cats have seen several of Cats to face 6 Big 12 Conference teams in Austin tournament the team is featured in the tournament earlier this season.

It will be the second time the Cats have faced both New Mexico State and the host Longhorns this spring.

In addition, K-State hasn't beaten the Tigers, Bears or Cornhuskers this year and has finished ahead of the Buffaloes on one occasion.

"We came close in Arizona versus Missouri, but they got us by one stroke," Knight said. "We've closed the gap, but we haven't been able to pull out a victory over these schools this year."

The Cats are taking five golfers to the Lone Star State, including three freshmen: Elise Carpentier, Morgan Hadler and Miranda Smith.

"For the most part, they're ready to play," Knight said. "The only thing they can control is themselves. You have to take care of your own business, take care of yourself, and be patient. That's one thing I've emphasized to them all year."

Knight said the squad had a team meeting upon its arrival in Austin, followed by a practice round Thursday to get familiar with the course.

Carpentier said practice rounds are useful, along with the advice and instruction of Knight and older members of the team who have seen the course before.

"Some courses, the players feel comfortable on immediately,"

Knight said, "but the main thing is getting comfortable on the greens."

"When we've struggled this year, it's been on the greens — when the team never felt like they could get in rhythm. If you can get a feel for the greens, you should be able to score high for the meet."

Despite the stiff competition, Carpentier said the squad can take a step forward if they play well in Texas.

"Of course it would be nice to beat some good teams down there, but we'll need to take care of our personal games and play our golf," Carpentier said.

Pitcher injuries create problems for Cat baseball

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State head baseball coach Mike Clark is fond of saying that pitching comprises 75 to 80 percent of his sport.

Going into this weekend's series against No. 4 Texas (20-5, 7-2) starting at 2 p.m. at Frank Myers Field today, K-State (5-12, 1-8) has only nine of 13 pitchers on its roster available to pitch, including two players who were probable redshirts.

The dwindling of the K-State pitching staff started even before the 2000 season began. Last season's leading returning starter, Brett Reid, was dismissed from the team for off-the-field problems.

Next, Southwest Missouri State junior transfer Brock Smith, a projected starter, left the team because of his father's ailing health.

Sophomore Blake Johnson was expected to contend for the closing role, or, at the least, see extensive time in middle relief, but he was lost for the season after appearing in only two games.

Last weekend, sophomore starter Derek Ver Helst left K-State's game against Nebraska after 1 2/3 innings. Sophomore spot starter Kurt Lehrmann didn't make his scheduled start Sunday because of soreness in his shoulder, and junior closer Kelvin Day injured his elbow in March 10 game. None will pitch against the Longhorns.

Clark said he has never seen injuries to a position like what has happened to his team this year, at least in college baseball.

"I was reading today about the Royals' situation — they're going through it in spring training right now," Clark said. "Our problem is it isn't spring training, and we don't have a minor league system to help out."

What K-State does have are freshmen pitchers Greg English and Keith Gernant who were tagged to redshirt, but may not because of the injuries. The Wildcats do have two of their three regular starting pitchers in senior Jason Wells (0-4, 9.82) and sophomore Luke Robertson (1-3, 5.72), but Clark has no idea who might be the third this weekend.

"Right now it's T.J. Staff — that more or less means whoever is leftover after the first two days," Clark said.

If there is a bright side to the pitching situation, it's that the K-State coaching staff will get to see the future of the team, albeit a little earlier than expected.

"It's a great opportunity for some of our younger kids to step up and show what they can do," Clark said. "Anything we can do in a positive way right now with these young kids really opens the doors for our future."

"This is not the way we drew it up, but we have to play the hand that's dealt us. Hopefully, we can find a couple of wild cards this weekend."

Texas regatta gives women's crew chance to rack up another victory

The K-State women's rowing team will try to make it two wins in a row when they compete in the Heart of Texas regatta in Austin, Texas, today.

In the Cats' last competition on Sunday, they opened the spring campaign with a 20-1 crushing of Creighton at Tuttle Creek Reservoir. Against Creighton, the K-State first and second varsity eight teams both turned in times better than Creighton's lone entry. The first varsity eight team's time of 7:33.8 in the 1800 meter race was 35 seconds better than the Creighton time.

HIGH hopes K-State pole vaulter continues to improve, has chance to compete in Olympic atmosphere

K-State's Erin Anderson clears the bar during a pole-vault competition earlier this year at Ahearn Field House. Anderson cleared 13 feet, 5 1/2 inches at nationals this past weekend.

With the outdoor season set to begin this weekend in Emporia, Kan., members of the K-State track team have high hopes.

For senior pole vaulter Erin Anderson, who will not compete for another week, there is no limit to how high the bar might rise this season.

In Anderson's last meet, the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships in Fayetteville, Ark., on March 10-11, she placed second in the nation with a career-high jump of 13 feet, 5 1/2 inches. What makes that mark even more impressive is that Anderson was vaulting 12 feet, 9 inches just three weeks earlier.

That eight-inch increase is the result of several factors, Anderson said.

"It's the way the coaches have training set up — he's a great coach," Anderson said about head track coach Cliff Rovelto.

Rovelto was equally generous in praising Anderson for her rapid improvement, especially since she has been vaulting for only a short time.

"It is probably a little bit rare because Erin's only been a vaulter for 2 1/2 years," Rovelto said. "She was originally recruited as a high jumper out of high school. Her progress has been pretty remarkable, for her to go from scratch to where she is in that period of time."

Much of Anderson's recent improvement might be traced back to the Big 12 Indoor Championships the week before nationals. In that meet, the 5-foot-10-inch Anderson claimed the first-place trophy by beating a higher-ranked opponent, resulting in a huge hike in confidence, Anderson said.

"It was a big win for me," Anderson said. "It was down to me and the girl from KU, and she had previously jumped higher than me. The last three weeks, I've had a lot of things coming together for me. The win at conference gave me an elated boost. I said a prayer and kept going."

The drastic improvements might start slowing down now, however, as Anderson prepares for her next meet, the San Diego Invitational on March 25, Rovelto said.

"She'll be training very hard for the next month," Rovelto said. "She will have a high volume of work, so she will not be as fresh as she will be later in the season. If she jumps high, it's because she had a good day, not because the training pushed her that way."

Anderson will have some extra incentive to keep improving, though. This year is an Olympic year, and Anderson already has jumped high enough to qualify for the trials. The prospect of competing in the Olympic atmosphere is very exciting, Anderson said.

"It's been a goal of mine since I was a kid. I can't believe I have a chance to compete with the best of the best," Anderson said, but added that qualifying for the U.S. team might not come yet. "Maybe in another four years I'll shoot for the Olympics."

If she does not make the Olympic team, Anderson will be able to take comfort in the fact that she is on the leading front of the advancement of women's pole vault. As Anderson and the rest of women's vaulting elite improves, so will the expectations for women's vaulting in general, Rovelto said.

"In all new events, whether it be the weight and hammer for women or the steeplechase for women, people who knew the events were not real accurate in judging what is good, what the threshold is," Rovelto said. "A couple of years ago, coaches looked at 12 foot like it was a real good jump. Now 13 feet may be closer."

"I certainly think Erin is capable of 14 feet."

Spring brings March Madness filled with many matchups, office pools

BALMER

It wouldn't be proper to start this St. Patrick's Day without a pint of Guinness raised in a toast to health and humanity. Cheers to the few Irish lads and lassies who tolerate the large number of non-traditionalists caught up in the revelry of green beer and Lucky Charms.

With that aside, it's time to bask in the glory of the other rite of spring that began Thursday: March Madness. Yes, you've probably noticed that extra coat of Turtle Wax on Dick Vitale's dome and wondered what's up. It's NCAA Tournament time. What better reason to start your spring break two days early?

By now, 16 teams already have punched their tickets to the second round, but there's still plenty to discuss regarding the remaining 32 teams scattered throughout the East and South brackets. So, blessed with my extensive knowledge of Nintendo's "Double Dribble" and well-versed in the rhetoric of commentator Bill Rafferty (You might know him from such expressions as, "With the Kisssss!"), let's get down to business.

BEST WAY TO MAKE AN EASY BUCK

■ Pick Duke and Temple to meet in the East Regional Championship. The Blue Devils haven't shown much vulnerability outside of upset losses to St. Johns and Maryland, two teams on the opposite side of the bracket. Bet on Shane Battier and the "Baby Blues" freshmen class to roll.

Temple never has reached a Final Four, but Coach John Chaney has his best squad in years and a stellar point guard in Pepe Sanchez. The Owls zone defense remains its strength, but Mark Karcher has added a scoring presence from the inside and out.

MOST LIKELY TO BE EXPOSED

■ Cincinnati might be the popular choice with Kenyon Martin out, but the Bearcats should rack up some quality wins before making their exit.

The team that pool participants should be wary about is Connecticut. The defending champs, the Huskies picked up a fifth-seed in the South after an impressive run to the championship game of the Big East Tournament. This seed could be viewed as a blessing and a curse, since at least one 12th seed has upset a fifth seed since the field expanded to 64 teams in 1988.

Utah State will be the team looking to upend the defending champs. The Aggies roll in with a NCAA-best 19-straight victories and a lot of depth. If UConn is to fall, USU will have to feast on its bread and butter, the three-point shot.

North Carolina is another team to avoid. The Tar Heels, 18-13, earned an eight seed on the strength of their schedule. They might take down Missouri, but Stanford will run them out of the gym.

MOST LIKELY TO BE UPSET, AND THEN BLAME IT ON SOMETHING ELSE

■ Indiana. The Hoosiers open against a Pepperdine team many experts didn't believe would make it to the dance. This isn't Tom Asbury's Pepperdine, however. The Waves never stop running and play a pressure defense that can make opponents' heads spin Exorcist-style. Under first-year Coach Jan van Breda Kolff, the West Coast conference kings also set a school-record for three-pointers. If Pepperdine stays true to its weapons, Indiana could be on its way to its fourth first-round outing in the past six years, something that would leave Bob Knight hopping mad in the postgame press conference.

ODDS AND ENDS

■ Roy Williams won't cry after a Kansas loss this year. Although Ol'

Roy has shed more tears than a sorority send-off over the past five years, a Jayhawk loss this season, probably against DePaul or Duke, won't be unexpected.

■ Bill Self will see nothing but dollar signs. The Tulsa head coach has been the hottest coaching prospect since early in the season. After the Golden Hurricane's Sweet 16 run, expect the hype surrounding Self to reach Pokémon-like proportions.

■ The probable second-round matchup of Florida and Illinois could be one of the tournament's best. Lon Kruger versus his former Gators is only one of the game's interesting notes. Expect an offensive flurry from Billy Donovan's troops en route to a Sweet 16 date with Duke.

Research center closer to reality

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is no room on campus — at least for one research department at K-State.

The contribution of a private donor has enabled the Center for Basic Cancer Research to take a step closer to its goal of being on campus.

Linda Innes, director of development for the center, said Marty Vanier, president of the Grand Mere Development Inc. and graduate of K-State, recently made a commitment of $500,000 to the center's fund-raising goal. The $2.3 million being raised by the center will help pay for the $11 million addition to Ackert Hall that will break ground next month.

Last year, a $500,000 gift was also made by Helen Graves, aunt of Gov. Bill Graves.

Vanier said she decided to make the donation because the cancer center is a good cause and having the center, now in the industrial park on the east side of Manhattan, back on campus would both increase K-State's visibility and allow better access for its visitors.

"I think what the center is doing is important, and at this time, I had the opportunity to make a significant gift," Vanier said. "I feel that it will be an advantage to have the research center back on campus, because right now, it is difficult to get people to its present location. With the new addition, it will bring it to the heart of campus, not only helping the staff, but the students as well."

The new addition will allow the center, along with the Department of Biochemistry and Division of Biology, to be relocated.

"This will increase the accessibility of the center to people on campus and those who visit," Innes said. "It will also help with the visibility and increase the space available for cancer research."

Innes said Vanier chose the nuclear magnetic resonance lab to be named after her.

"This lab is going to be state-of-

KELLY GLASSCOCK/COLLEGIAN

Construction of an $11 million addition to Ackert Hall is expected to start next month. The cancer research center in Manhattan's industrial park will move into the addition.

the-art and be equipped with the latest resources to aid in cancer research," Vanier said. "Advances in research comes from work done in the labs. I was glad to be able to select this portion of the center to put my name on."

"I feel it will be an advantage to have the research center back on campus, because right now, it is difficult to get people to its present location."

donor.

Innes said the addition will be supported primarily through state and university funds as well as money allocated from the Crumbling Classrooms budget. She said most of the private funds being raised through the cancer center will come from individuals with an interest in the center and its research.

"Since people cannot major in cancer research, we do not have any alumni to help us with raising funds," Innes said. "We then have to look at people who have shown an interesting supporting the center or those who have been touched by losing someone from cancer."

Innes said the new addition will allow the colleges of Veterinary Medicine, Human Ecology, Agriculture and Arts and Sciences to support the cause of cancer research in one area. Vanier also said the work the center does with other campus institutions is one of the most important things the research center does.

"I feel that it is important how the center works with other departments and colleges while doing cancer research," Vanier said. "It is a way to integrate specialties into their main goal."

Innes said the addition is important because it will provide more space and better conditions to research cancer cures.

"It is extremely necessary to have a new structure so to be able to enhance our cancer research program," Innes said. "We want to be able to increase the awareness immensely, because the new building will bring the center more into the limelight."

The cancer center, established in 1980, is non-profit and devoted to the basics of cancer research.

Its four main areas of concentration are breast cancer, prostate cancer, skin cancer and leukemia research.

Germans shocked by school shooting

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROSENHEIM, Germany — A 16-year-old shot the director of his boarding school Thursday after being suspended for rebellious behavior, then turned the large-caliber pistol on himself, police said.

The ninth grader was sent home Wednesday, and a test showed he had used drugs. He returned to the school Thursday, encountered the school director in a stairwell and pumped several bullets into him, then fired several times at his own head, the police said.

Both the student and the 57-year-old director suffered life-threatening head wounds and were taken to hospitals by helicopter, authorities said. The names of the student and the director were not made public.

After being suspended, the student had been taken to his parents' home near the school in the southern German town of Brannenburg, near the Austrian border, police said. Early Thursday, the director received results of a test that showed the student had used drugs.

School authorities were to have decided soon on whether the student should be expelled permanently.

The school has 94 students from throughout Germany, ranging in age from 12 to 18.

The student had been in a computer science class taught by the school director. It was not clear how the teenager obtained the gun.

The shooting is just the latest in a string of school violence in Germany, shocking a nation unaccustomed to such violent crimes and prompting calls for tightening already strict gun laws.

In the past, Germans read about the wave of school shootings in the United States but believed it couldn't happen here.

But in November, a 16-year-old boy killed four people in a shooting spree in an Alpine Bavarian town, then shot himself. That same month, a 15-year-old student fatally stabbed his teacher 22 times with a kitchen knife because he said he hated her.

House passes animal-cruelty amendment

By DAVID MILES
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House on Thursday revived a proposal to enact "Scruffy's Law" — legislation making certain types of animal cruelty felonies.

Rep. David Haley successfully amended a bill on the supervision of inmates after they are released from prison.

The bill received initial approval on a voice vote, and final action is expected today.

Haley, D-Kansas City, acknowledged that his proposal has been dubbed by some as the "Scruffy amendment."

The name stems from a 1997 case in which four young men in Kansas City tortured and fatally beat a dog named Scruffy.

Haley has offered his proposal during each of the past two legislative sessions, but his attempts ultimately failed.

The House approved his amendment, 56-47. It would make the following actions felonies: intentionally killing, maiming, torturing, burning, mutilating or causing serious physical injury to an animal.

Convicted offenders would be sentenced to between 30 days and one year in prison and fined at least $100.

Those acts are misdemeanors now.

Haley said his amendment was aimed at punishing people who torture animals for their own perverse pleasure.

House Judiciary Chairman Mike O'Neal said many prosecutors told him that offenders often serve more jail time under misdemeanor convictions than felonies.

"The law is tougher now than what Representative Haley would make it," O'Neal, R-Hutchinson, said.

Rep. Barbara Allen also amended the bill to prohibit state and local law-enforcement officials from releasing anyone from custody before searching state and federal databases for outstanding arrest warrants.

Allen, R-Overland Park, noted that Kim L. Davis had been released from jail even though a warrant for his arrest was pending. Davis, of Kansas City, Mo., was later charged with first-degree murder in a carjacking in Independence, Mo., last month in which a 6-year-old boy was dragged to his death.

The House passed Allen's amendment on a voice vote.

Last night, around 12:45 a.m., a woman was driving her car west on Marlatt Avenue when the oncoming car swerved into her lane, hitting her head on and killing her instantly. Betsy Rose, 22, a senior in architectural engineering, was coming home from a late night of studying at her friend's house when her life was taken by a drunk driver. The name of the other vehicle's driver has not been released. By being 19 and legally drunk, the driver not only faces counts of DUI and involuntary manslaughter, but also an MIP since Kansas has a no-tolerance law for anyone drinking under 21.

Betsy was class president all four years in high school, as well as involved in many clubs there and at K-State. Betsy was going to graduate this May with honors. She had already accepted a job with one of the nation's largest architectural engineering firms based in Los Angeles. Her family could not be reached for comments.

For that reason, he said they put the fire out before going into the house.

"If we can get here in time where we feel safe with the structure of the house, we'll go in and make an interior attack," he said.

The fire could continue to smolder for several days, and the investigation will continue as well, he said.

First lady cleared by independent council findings

By PETE YOST
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Independent Counsel Robert Ray said Thursday he found no credible evidence that first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton or senior White House officials were involved in seeking the FBI background files of Republicans.

Ray also said there is no credible evidence that former White House counsel Bernard Nussbaum lied to Congress about the hiring of the White House security chief whose office gathered the files.

Nussbaum was quoted in an FBI interview summary as saying that Clinton had recommended hiring Craig Livingstone.

Nussbaum told the House Government Reform and Oversight Committee on June 26, 1996, that the FBI's summary was incorrect.

"There was no substantial or credible evidence that Mrs. Clinton was involved in the hiring of Mr. Livingstone," Ray said in a two-page statement. "Accordingly, this office declined prosecution and has closed the Nussbaum matter" as well as its investigation into whether the files were misused.

Ray's office "determined that there was no substantial and credible evidence that any senior White House official, or first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, was involved in seeking confidential Federal Bureau of Investigation background reports of former White House staff from the prior administrations of President Bush and President Reagan."

Ray is sending a report on the FBI files investigation to three federal appeals judges, who will give the people named in it 90 days to respond before releasing the report along with any responses.

The report is to be followed by two others — one on Clinton's role in the purge of the White House travel office and another on the Clintons' Whitewater land dealings in Arkansas. That third report also will deal with Clinton's legal work for her Whitewater partners' failing savings and loan.

The White House has said the gathering of files was a bureaucratic blunder based on outdated Secret Service lists of White House entry passholders.

Ray has angered some Republicans whose files were gathered by the Clinton White House.

Those Republicans wanted him to bring prosecutions for violations of their privacy, but Ray pointed out that his office does not have jurisdiction to investigate alleged violations of the Privacy Act of 1974.

"The main contribution was during mandatory meetings. We really stressed the problems from last year," he said. "We really caught things before they got out of hand."

McKinney said he helped patrol some of the target areas on campus but did not find any candidates who were in violation of campaign policies.

"We were all to keep our eyes out," he said. "I walked around and patrolled some areas but didn't find any problems."

Announcing the results on television was another way Morgan said the elections process was improved.

He said it was an effective way to let all candidates know the results simultaneously.

"I thought that was a great thing because it gave everyone notification at the same time," Morgan said. "It made it unbiased."

Results of the runoff election were announced on KSDB-FM 91.9.

Even though the process ran smoothly, Morgan said he hopes next year's committee will spend more time promoting the election.

"I was having to deal with a lot of nuts and bolts of online voting," he said. "I was not able to promote the election like I hope the next person will."

Habitat helps out in Texas

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Seven K-State students will embark on a charitable and inexpensive vacation over spring break.

Jon Anderson, president of the K-State chapter of Habitat for Humanity and senior in construction science management, said he and six other chapter members will be leaving Sunday morning for Austin, Texas, to assist with seven houses in the Austin area.

"It has sounded like something fun to do in the past, so I decided to try it this year," Anderson said. "It is a cheaper alternative for a spring break trip and a way to also give back to the local community."

Anderson said group members will be working with the Habitat affiliate in Austin to finish touch-up work on some houses. He said they will be working from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and staying at a Habitat-owned duplex during the week.

He said he is excited about going to Texas and working with the community-service organization because it gives him the opportunity to apply skills he is learning in class.

"I became involved in Habitat because construction is a part of my major," Anderson said. "I also wanted to get involved in community service, and this is a way to help a family with needs and putting my skills to good work."

Karen Lienau, public affairs officer for Habitat for Humanity International, said the spring break alternative is a program called Collegiate Challenge. It offers high school and college students the opportunity to spend their spring break or other school vacations helping others. She said the program, developed 11 years ago, runs all year but receives the most participation from Feb. 27 to April 22. Students must provide their own transportation to work with the local Habitat affiliates and must provide a donation to the building project fund.

"After the initial challenge in 1989, we found that students continued to have an interest in the program," Lienau said. "We have found that students have made the decision to do something to give back to the community. Not necessarily just in their hometown, but elsewhere in the United States."

Lienau said more than 8,500 students from more than 400 colleges, universities and high schools are participating in this year's Collegiate Challenge and have pledged to raise almost $800,000. She said the program and others like it across the country have seen an increase over the past few years.

"Students seem to want to get something out of life," Lienau said. "They want to have the feeling that they are making a difference in the lives of other people."

Kristy Chance, senior in animal science, said a friend participated in a Habitat spring break alternative last year, and it sounded like fun. She said one of the reasons she enjoys working with Habitat is helping families get back on their feet.

"By working with Habitat, it gets people from many different departments and majors together to work toward a common goal," Chance said.

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol want students' spring break to be enjoyable, not permanent.

Members of GAMMA, a drug and alcohol education program, promoted spring break safety Thursday afternoon at a booth in the K-State Student Union.

Fliers highlighting 10 popular spring break spots ranging from Cancun to Colorado were available for students to pick up. Each flier featured different statistics related to alcohol, including drinking age, the number and type of alcohol violations and the number of arrests during spring break.

Reminders on how to manage and monitor alcohol intake also were listed on each flier.

"We're just trying to promote overall health, awareness and safety," said Matthew Painter, co-special projects chairman for GAMMA.

He said being with friends and using designated drivers were two of the best ways to promote safety while partying.

"To be safe on spring break, be with a group of friends," Painter said. "And don't be afraid to use a taxi service."

Phone numbers for various taxi services were included on each vacation spot's flier for convenience.

Linda Richter, professor of political science, said that if your spring break destination is in a foreign country, it is important to be cautious of its laws and to carry a passport at all times. She said having identification on you at all times can sometimes help out during difficult situations.

If possible, try to avoid driving or renting cars. She said driving in another country is difficult when you're not familiar with the roads and traffic system.

She said if you do rent a car, take pictures of it and document any markings or dents it might have.

The safest places to swim while abroad are in pools and by off-shore islands. She said some of the most interesting countries and loveliest resorts have no sewage systems.

Cheri Cregut, marketing coordinator for American Automobile Association, gave several tips for those who will be driving to their destination.

"There's a lot of important things, but the most important is to keep aware of your surroundings," she said.

Cregut said she recommended knowing where you are and taking note of your personal belongings.

GAMMA safety tips

1. Be sure to check your vehicle before leaving town.
2. Use latex condoms to assist in stopping the spread of sexually transmitted diseases, and remember 80 percent of individuals with STDs have no symptoms.
3. Secure or remove all valuables from your home before leaving for spring break to protect possessions from theft.
4. If a friend shows symptoms of alcohol poisoning, call 911 and do not leave the person alone.

Dow index shows record point jump

By EILEEN GLANTON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Dow industrial index rocketed almost 500 points Thursday in a record-shattering rally as investors poured money into blue chips that had been battered by Wall Street's frenzy for technology stocks.

It was a reversal of fortunes that came on the busiest day ever in the history of the New York Stock Exchange.

In just two days, the Dow stocks wiped out more than 40 percent of their losses over the past two months.

The technology-focused Nasdaq Stock Market, which this week was swooning sharply from record heights, rode the Dow's coattails to a sharp gain.

Analysts, however, tempered their enthusiasm, wary that the rally might be nothing more than another volatile day in a volatile year.

"It's too soon to tell whether this is anything more than a short-term head fake," said David G. Sowerby, vice president at Loomis, Sayles & Co.

The Dow closed up 499.19, or 4.9 percent, at 10,630.60, smashing the previous record point gain of 380.53 on Sept. 8, 1998, but nowhere near the record 15.34-percent jump in 1933.

The Nasdaq composite index, whose losses had fueled the Dow's rise, rebounded to close up 134.77, or 2.9 percent at 4,717.39, after being down as much as 127 points early in the day.

On the heels of Wednesday's 320-point gain, the rally helped the Dow gain back a stunning 42 percent of the losses recorded since it peaked at 11,722.98 on Jan. 14.

Even with its unprecedented two-day rally, the Dow remained 9.3-percent below its Jan. 14 record of 11,722.98.

While the market's early strength Thursday came from long-scorned industrial stocks, the euphoria ultimately lifted technology stocks, which had driven the Nasdaq down 465 points in the past three sessions.

At the depths of its decline Thursday, the Nasdaq was down 11.8 percent from March 10's record of 5,048.62. With its recovery later in the day, its decline was cut to 6.6 percent.

A drop of more than 10 percent is considered a signal of a correction, or downturn in a rising market, but not necessarily a change to a bear market.

The best evidence that corrections don't last forever came from the Dow. Investors' willingness to dump blue-chip stocks in favor of technology shares pushed the Dow into a correction in mid-February.

Now, many of the blue chips that had been beaten down are enticing investors as relative bargains. Johnson & Johnson rose 2 7/8 to 79 13/16, 3M rose 5 9/16 to 88 1/16 and General Electric gained 5 7/16 to 139.

Gay civil-unions bill passes Vermont's House

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTPELIER, Vt. — The Vermont House approved historic legislation Thursday allowing gays to form civil unions that would carry many of the benefits — and burdens — of marriage.

The House voted 76-69 to forward the bill to the Senate, where leaders have said they believe it will have the votes to pass.

A crowd of at least 150 people lined the galleries and balconies of the House chamber as lawmakers cast their votes. Many wore their feelings on their lapels — pink stickers for supporters, white for opponents.

"This certainly is groundbreaking," said Peg Byron of the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, a gay advocacy group. "I think it really sets a moral as well as a legislative example for the rest of the country."

Gay couples who form civil unions would be entitled to some 300 state benefits or privileges available to married couples, in such areas as inheritance, property transfers, medical decisions, insurance and taxes. Such couples could file a joint state income tax return, for example.

The federal government still would not recognize such unions with regard to such things as immigration rights, Social Security and federal taxes.

Congress and more than 30 states have passed laws denying recognition to same-sex marriages performed in other states. Nonetheless, some suggest those state laws might not apply to same-sex civil unions performed in Vermont.

The Vermont bill provides for unions that amount to marriage in everything but name. Partners could apply for a license from town clerks and have their civil union certified by a justice of the peace, a judge or a member of the clergy.

Partners who want to split up would have to go through dissolution proceedings in Family Court, in the same way that married couples have to pursue a divorce. They would also assume each other's debts, just as married couples do.

Although the bill carries Vermont to the edge of recognizing gay marriage, lawmakers still sought to preserve the term "marriage" for the union of a man and a woman, adopting an amendment making that clear. That definition previously had existed only in the bill's preamble and not in the text.

"This raises my comfort level,"

Republican Rep. Bruce Hyde said. The House also rejected an amendment that would have prohibited Vermont from recognizing gay marriages performed elsewhere.

The entire issue was forced on the Legislature because the state Supreme Court ruled in December that same-sex couples are being unconstitutionally denied the benefits of marriage. The high court left it up to the Legislature to decide whether to allow gay marriages or create some kind of domestic partnership.

Opponents of the bill said it far exceeded anything done by any other state.

"Vermont is so far out on a limb by itself because there's nothing close to it," said Vince McCarthy of the American Center for Law and Justice. "Even a state as liberal as Massachusetts doesn't recognize domestic partnerships."

In Vermont, civil union partners also would be permitted to make medical decisions on one another's behalf; they would be responsible for one another's remains when one died; and they would be able to inherit each other's estates without having to pay hefty estate taxes.

Despite the excitement among gay rights advocates, there was disappointment that Vermont did not simply approve gay marriage outright.

For 5th year, concert series brings musicians to the

Bird House

She started her career in music, then got a doctorate in psychology and opened a therapy business in midtown New York. About six years ago, Lucy Kaplansky found herself back on the music scene.

Tonight, Kaplansky will play a concert with Stephan Smith for the five-year celebration of BirdHouse Productions at Manhattan Arts Center.

David Kameron, founder of BirdHouse, said Kaplansky is well-known throughout the songwriters' circuit.

"The thing about Lucy is she is friends with just about all the songwriters we book," he said. "She recently worked with Dar Williams and Richard Shindell on the album 'Cry, Cry, Cry.'"

Kaplansky has also worked with artists such as John Gorka, Shawn Colvin and Suzanne Vega. Kameron said she performs a variety of cover songs from these artists.

"One thing is that she has excellent song selection, and she covers some of the best songs," he said. "You want to cheer for her when she plays. She really wins an audience over."

Steve Martini, BirdHouse organizer, said he saw Kaplansky when she was on tour to promote "Cry, Cry, Cry."

"In the folk world, that was probably one of the biggest groupings," he said. "We saw them in Lawrence, and it was great."

Of the three artists on "Cry, Cry, Cry," Martini said Kaplansky is the one who sticks out.

"She's very talented and has a beautiful voice," he said. "She can play the guitar wonderfully, too."

Smith, who will be the opening act for the birthday concert, plays music graced by multicultural themes, Kameron said. Smith's work has been compared to that of artists such as Woody Guthrie and Bob Dylan.

"He sounds like Woody Guthrie or early Dylan," Kameron said. "People say telling an artist that could ruin their career, but he is so fresh and original."

Smith recently toured with Ani DiFranco, and Kameron said he is definitely an artist people can expect to hear more from in the future.

Kameron said cake and coffee will be served prior to the show as part of the celebration. At intermission, he said, there will be drawings for a variety of compact discs and gift certificates.

Gretchen Holden, BirdHouse organizer, said the organization has grown from small audiences of the organizers' friends to larger crowds of students and strangers.

"When we first started out, there were smaller houses of about 80, but now we're almost always full," she said. "We can pretty much count on a good house at any show we have."

Holden said audiences never know exactly what to expect at a BirdHouse performance. She said the organization's aim is variety, and that bringing a range of music from folk to bluegrass is what BirdHouse hopes to continue.

"When people come, they never know what they're going to get that night," she said. "You can't get this stuff on the radio, so it's sort of a surprise. We'll continue to scout out good sounds, and we'll put in as much range as we can."

Martini said tickets are available at the Manhattan Arts Center and the Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville. Prices are $10 for students and $12 for the general public. He said even though it is spring break for K-State, he thinks the concert sell out.

"It should be with two great artists. I wouldn't wait to get tickets," he said. "Typically, our crowd is not college students, but with the quality of performers, it might bring them in."

Kameron said having two artists with diverse backgrounds is a nice way to celebrate five years of BirdHouse.

"We have two great songwriters, two great performers," Kameron said. "To see two artists who are totally different in the same night is a wonderful thing."

St. Patrick's celebration to feature parade, music

By ERIN SCHNEWEIS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

A day after the official green holiday, the 22nd annual St. Patrick's Celebration will take place Saturday in Aggieville.

The events include a parade, live entertainment, food vendors, face painters, a moon walk and races.

The parade will start at 11 a.m. in the City Park, go down 12th Street and wind around Laramie and 11th streets. Then participants will head down Moro Street and conclude the parade at the park.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said there are prizes for those showing their green pride.

"The Aggieville Business Association is awarding $100 for the largest group entered in the parade," she said. "Streetside Records is offering $100 worth of gift coins for the parade entry that displays the most St. Patrick's Day spirit."

Streetside Records is teaming up with Unique Fitness and Aerobics Inc. to offer parade prizes.

Eileen Meyer, Streetside Records manager, said judges will stand along the entire parade route to determine who has the most spirit. The $100 prize would go far in her store, she said.

"One-hundred dollars in our store is quite a few CDs and a bunch of cassettes, and even a few pairs of sunglasses," she said. "Our store tends to have a lot of fun."

Entrants for the parade were to be signed up by Tuesday, but Sieben said they would accept late entries.

The Spoke Shamrock Bike Ride, a new contest for people of all ages, will take place during the parade. Those competing must pay $1 to enter, which will give them the opportunity to go through the parade route twice. The sponsors are Game Guy and the KBLS-FM 102.5. They will award trophies to the racer and bicycle wearing the most green, to the largest family and to the best-decorated bike.

Sieben said a special group in the parade is the Caledonian Pipe Band from Kansas City, Mo. The bagpipe group will perform in the parade and has received top honors in the Kansas City St. Patrick's Day Parade three times.

Following the parade, the pipe band will perform at the intersection of 12th and Moro.

Live entertainment will also come from the group Beihl and Hedman.

Pam Beihl, a K-State graduate in anthropology, and Bree Hedman, junior in mechanical engineering, will perform Irish folk music. Beihl is the lead singer and plays the guitar, and Hedman is the back-up singer and plays the piano. The duo will be featured outside Streetside Records after the parade. In January, the duo released a CD entitled "Disregarding Popularity."

Hedman said the duo is excited about performing and have been working on six new songs for the event. She said two particular songs she is looking forward to playing are "King of Moro Ave" and "Emily."

She said she hopes others will enjoy listening to their music.

"We enjoy what we are doing so much, we just want to share that with other people," Hedman said. "It's always wonderful to play for other people and share our excitement with them."

Following the parade there are three run and walk races for contestants to participate in. Contestants will be divided into 13 different age groups, ranging from 9 and younger to 70 and above. In each category, the first three men and the first three women who cross the finish line will receive medals. The next seven will receive ribbons.

Runners will pay a $15 entry fee and walkers will pay $13. Included in the price is a race T-shirt and a barbecue following the award ceremony at about 3 p.m. in Aggieville. Ed Klimek, spokesman for the race committee, said others will benefit from the entry fees.

"The proceeds that we receive from this, after we pay for the T-shirts and other expenses, will go to the local Special Olympics," he said.

The 2-mile fun run starts at 12:30 p.m. in Aggieville. The contestants will run around City Park twice.

The next event is the 10k road race at 1:15 p.m. Klimek said it is a U.S. certified track and field race. The first place winners in the men's and women's divisions will receive $200 prize packages.

There is a leprechaun three-mile walk that will follow the 10k runners. Everyone who participates in this event will receive a ribbon.

Klimek said the committee is expecting a good turnout.

"We had over 720 participants last year," he said. "We are expecting that many, if not more, this year."

Sieben said K-State students are more than welcome to come, but she said she doesn't expect student attendance to be high due to spring break.

"I think it will be mainly the community," Sieben said. "We hope students who haven't left for break will come down."

Bush's remarks about McCain spark GOP division

By RON FOURNIER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — John McCain's supporters are accusing George W. Bush of showing little respect for the senator and his political reform agenda, saying "macho talk" has killed hopes for an early endorsement that could be vital to Bush's prospects in November.

The Texan and his advisers scrambled Thursday to explain the remarks he made in an interview with The New York Times, fearing the fallout could further alienate McCain and his independent-minded supporters.

Reminded that the Arizona senator helped produce record turnouts in the Republican presidential primaries, Bush told the newspaper, "Well, then, how come he didn't win?" Asked whether McCain had raised his consciousness about reform, the Texas governor replied, "No, he didn't change my views." He said he had no intentions of making concessions to McCain on campaign finance reform.

Trying to make amends Thursday, Bush said in Illinois, "I appreciate the hard campaign that John McCain waged. He ran a good race. He highlighted the need for reform, and I appreciate the ideas that he brought forth in the campaign."

Bush's campaign manager, Joe Allbaugh, called McCain's top political adviser, John Weaver, to say he regretted that the newspaper story didn't include more of the nice things Bush said about McCain. According to officials in both campaigns, Allbaugh also promised that Bush would go out of his way to speak well of McCain to reporters.

Shortly after that telephone call, Bush said at a news conference that the story "didn't characterize how I feel."

Bush said he won't embrace McCain's plan to ban unlimited, unregulated "soft money," but he argues that there is common ground on other reform measures.

"Of course, he and I agree on a lot, and it starts with this: The best reform for America is to end the Clinton-Gore era in Washington, D.C.," the governor said in Illinois.

McCain, however, has said Bush can't unite the party simply over a shared dislike of Democrat Al Gore.

Reading past more conciliatory language in the newspaper interview, McCain's advisers said they were stunned that Bush would strike a dismissive chord while his aides privately were courting McCain's endorsement. Independent and swing voters, such as those who flocked to McCain in some GOP primaries, could determine the presidential election.

"Senator McCain looks forward to bringing the party together by campaigning across the country for reform-minded Republicans, and we're a little disappointed by the tone of the Bush campaign," spokesman Todd Harris said.

Harris announced the formation of a political action committee that will pay McCain's expenses as he barnstorms the country this year on behalf of GOP candidates and his own initiatives.

A senior McCain adviser said a quick resolution to the feud, which was never likely, is now out of the question. He put the odds of McCain endorsing before the election at "no better than 50-50."

Another adviser said it was now probable that McCain would never directly endorse Bush himself, though he could still back the ticket late in the campaign.

The senator was on vacation and unavailable for comment.

McCain's advisers have said their boss realizes that Bush can't bow to his every demand because the GOP base would revolt. What he wants from Bush is a sincere pledge to make progress on political reforms and a show of respect.

In an effort to mend fences, Bush advisers called McCain intermediaries to point out that the Texan had also praised his former rival in the Times story. They faxed dozens of copies of a Dallas Morning News interview that appeared more conciliatory.

Strategists in both camps said Bush handled the situation awkwardly.

FRIDAY, MARCH 17, 2000

RUSSELL CROWE
The Insider
RICHARD FARNSWORTH
The Straight Story
SEAN PENN
Sweet and Lowdown
KEVIN SPACEY
American Beauty
DENZEL WASHINGTON
The Hurricane

WHO SHOULD WIN: Washington, hands down, but with strong consideration for Spacey and a snubbed Jim Carrey for "Man on the Moon."
WHO WILL WIN: Washington, but probably for the wrong reason. A black actor has not won an Oscar for a leading role since Sidney Portier in 1964 for "Lilies of the Field." Only Spacey and Washington have won Oscars, which might give some weight to Crowe, who has never previously received a nomination.

supporting actor

MICHAEL CAINE
The Cider House Rules
TOM CRUISE Magnolia
MICHAEL CLARKE DUNCAN
The Green Mile
JUDE LAW
The Talented Mr. Ripley
HALEY JOEL OSMENT
The Sixth Sense

WHO SHOULD WIN: This is probably the strongest category of all in the Oscars, which explains the absence of Wes Bentley's performance in "American Beauty." The best performance, however, was from Law, for an undecipherably complex character in "The Talented Mr. Ripley." Any actor, however, would be deserving.
WHO WILL WIN: Caine is extremely respected and has not won an Oscar since 1986. Cruise is the only other to have been nominated, but stands a chance here because of his other work this year, "Eyes Wide Shut." Seriously, though, this race is wide open.

actress

ANNETTE BENING
American Beauty
JANET MCTEER
Tumbleweeds
JULIANNE MOORE
The End of an Affair
MERYL STREEP
Music of the Heart
HILARY SWANK
Boys Don't Cry

WHO SHOULD WIN: Swank should barely beat out Bening.
WHO WILL WIN: Swank. Although McTeer won the Golden Globe for her performance and Streep is enjoying her 12th nomination, Hollywood seems to love crossdressing.

supporting actress

TONI COLLETTE
The Sixth Sense
ANGELINA JOLIE
Girl, Interrupted
CATHERINE KEENER
Being John Malkovich
SAMANTHA MORTON
Sweet and Lowdown
CHLOË SEVIGNY
Boys Don't Cry

WHO SHOULD WIN: Cherry Jones for "Cradle Will Rock," or Gwyneth Paltrow for "The Talented Mr. Ripley." However, the lack of nominations for either would make such an accomplishment difficult. Jolie's performance is the strongest of those nominated.
WHO WILL WIN: This is the first Oscar nomination for each actress, so voters will not have the need to vote for the underdog actress. Jolie is probably the most popular in Hollywood, and the Academy loves to reward performances about a mental illness.

Who's up for this year's top awards in film? Collegian movie reviewer Kelly Furnas gives his take on some of the nominees for this year's Academy Awards, which will be televised live on ABC beginning at 7 p.m. March 26 from the Los Angeles Shrine Auditorium.

"American Beauty"

"The Cider House Rules"

"The Green Mile"

"The Insider"

"The Sixth Sense"

WHO SHOULD WIN: "The Hurricane." Undoubtedly the best film of the year, it was replaced by movies that are all good films but are not Oscar caliber. Also missing from the nominees are "Three Kings" and the critically lauded "Toy Story 2." Of those nominated, "The Sixth Sense" was the most popular at the box office, but hardly had any epic message. "The Insider" was too long (although many Academy voters think that's a plus). "The Green Mile" is an odd nomination, especially since its strongest component — Tom Hanks — was not nominated for best actor. "The Cider House Rules" is the most deserving of those nominated, but held back in its struggle of the human spirit. "American Beauty" just pushes the envelope too far,ardon the pun.

WHO WILL WIN: American Beauty seems to be everyone's favorite, and it will be the first movie since "Silence of the Lambs" to sweep the top five — picture, actor, actress, director and screenplay.

Despite difference of opinion, Oscar nominees still deserving

While watching the Fox News network last week — a habit I don't recommend to others — when a couple of movie experts were on "The Edge" blasting the Academy for never nominating movies that are popular with the public.

I couldn't believe what I was hearing. The Academy, they claimed, takes the opposite approach. Movies that are successful at the box office are ignored by voters intentionally.

How wrong are they?
Of the top-10 box office hits of 1999, only three failed to get Oscar nominations — "Big Daddy," which was No. 6; "Runaway Bride," which was No. 9; and "The Blair Witch Project," which was No. 10.

Granted, the nominations for some of the bigger hits, such as "Star Wars: Episode I — The Phantom Menace" were for visual effects and sound, and not for best picture of the year (although the No. 2 hit at the box office, "The Sixth Sense" is up for best picture).

But when you think about what makes a movie popular, it's often not that it is the best picture of the year. Instead, it is often the technical aspects of the movie that make viewers come out of the theater thinking "That was a cool movie" and force them to go back and see it again. Plus, when you consider that most repeat business comes from teen-agers, it makes sense that intellectually mundane movies such as "Big Daddy" can make large amounts of money at the box office.

Even though I strongly disagree with Academy voters with some of their choices this year, I still have to acknowledge how well they have recognized movies that are popular, as well as those that are strong pieces of art.

Some other notes on this year's Oscars:
■ Best song nominees include the obligatory Disney songs from "Tarzan" and "Toy Story 2." The Academy also acknowledged "South Park: Bigger, Longer and Uncut" by nominating "Blame Canada." Although the much more clever songs "Uncle Fucka" and "What Would Brian Boitano Do?" deserved nominations, it still should be quite entertaining to see any song from "South Park" be performed at the Los Angeles Shrine Auditorium.
■ Only Spike Jonze is nominated for directing without his film "Being John Malkovich" being up for best picture.

Frank Darabont failed to get nominated despite "The Green Mile" being recognized. Darabont deserves more of a nomination than, say, M. Night Shyamalan, whose work on "The Sixth Sense" was not the driving force behind the movie's success.

■ Hardly the most interesting category, but art direction has some interesting nominees, including "Anna and the King," "The Cider House Rules" and "Topsy-Turvy." The Academy was smart enough to nominate "Sleepy Hollow," but overlooked "Snow Falling on Cedars" and instead gave the nod to a highly undeserving "The Talented Mr. Ripley."

■ It's about time to stop the rotating hosts — Billy Crystal and Whoopi Goldberg. Only David Letterman has interrupted the two from monopolizing the hosting position since 1989. It's fine to stick with tradition, but the awards are becoming too predictable.

■ The Academy will present several lifetime achievement awards Sunday, including the Honorary Award by the Board of Governors to Polish director Andrzej Wajda. Although he has never won an Oscar (and most Americans have never heard of him), his filmography lists 44 films he directed, including three nominees for best foreign language film: "Land of Promise" in 1975, "The Maids of Wilko" in 1979 and "Man of Iron" in 1981.

Warren Beatty will receive the Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award for movie producers. He is the only person to be nominated for producer, director, writer and actor on a film — which he did twice — for "Heaven Can Wait" in 1978 and in 1981 for "Reds."

Heinrich declines to sign Lafene legislation

■ Regents receive bill to raise privilege fee after Senate approval.

By DANEDRI THOMPSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jason Heinrich threatened to veto a bill passed by Student Senate on March 16, but he decided instead to send the legislation to the administration without his signature.

The bill increases semester privilege fees by about $6 per person to fund Lafene Health Center. Heinrich told senators at their last meeting that he would veto any bill to fund Lafene that did not include at least a $4 user fee per office visit.

Heinrich, student body president, said he will still be sending a message to the administration and future K-State senators by not signing the bill.

"It's kind of just letting it go, but it's making a statement that there were different sides and people who didn't agree with that issue," he said. "It will show that there was still support for a user fee."

The bill raised privilege fees to fund Lafene and did not include a user fee. It passed Senate the Thursday before Spring Break, which is one reason Heinrich said he decided not to veto the bill.

"I think the timing of the thing was a big issue," he said.

All decisions for this fiscal year had to be made and sent to the Kansas Board of Regents for approval by last March 20.

Had Heinrich vetoed the bill, K-State administration would have had the final say on how Lafene was funded due to time constraints.

Lafene funding accounts for about $3 million of the $8.5 million raised annually through privilege fees.

HEINRICH

Under normal conditions, a Senate bill vetoed by the student body president would go back to Senate and be voted on again. It would have to pass a second time with a two-thirds majority.

The bill passed Senate with a two-thirds majority originally, but barely.

Senators voted three times on the same bill, failing it the first two times. Senate only passed it after Steve Hall, academic affairs and university relations chair, changed the proxy vote of Agriculture Sen. Matt Wolters, senator in agriculture, to favor the measure, making the vote for the bill a two-thirds majority.

Officially, Heinrich has not sent the bill to the administration. However, Senate's decision already has been passed from the administration to the regents for approval.

"The administration sent it to Board of Regents with a notation that it was still in legislative process," Bill Muir, faculty representative to Senate said.

Blood drive to kick off next week

By MAGGIE MARTIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Giving blood means giving life, said Beryl Adams, executive director of the Riley County American Red Cross.

The annual K-State vs. KU Blood Drive will begin April 3.

"Competition is always good and certainly encourages participation when a state rival is involved," Adams said. "Historically, K-State has always done well in the blood drive. Everyone here takes pride in giving blood."

K-State beat KU in the fall and should again in the spring, she said.

Shortages of blood resources have occurred recently. In the event of an emergency, those resources could be used up completely. This is why it is important to donate now, Adams said.

Many people who have been affected or have known others affected by the need for blood can understand even more why blood donations are important, she said.

It is important that Emergency Medical Services acquires large amounts of blood.

"Now and then we may come across someone in need of blood. If the blood banks are low, it may become a life or death situation," said William Dunn, Riley County EMS supervisor captain.

The goal this semester is to collect more than 800 units of blood. The blood donated will go to residents and hospitals in Kansas and Oklahoma.

The participation of faculty and students at the blood drive and the need for blood has increased in past years.

Katie Smith, junior in apparel and textile marketing, said she has donated in the past.

"It wasn't a bad experience at all, and it made me feel really good that I was helping someone else," she said. "You never know when you or a family member may need blood."

Adams encourages potential donors to seriously consider donating.

"There are tremendous benefits," Adams said. "You know you have made a difference."

Registration for the blood drive is available in the K-State Student Union, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and residence halls. Students and faculty can begin signing up today. Registration will continue through Wednesday.

SPRING HAS ARRIVED

Tad Uchiyama, senior in biology, pulls a bud from a tree outside Willard Hall on Sunday afternoon while Su Ng, senior in dietetics, looks for a description of the tree in a research book. The two said they have always noticed the tree blooming before the others in the area and have wanted to learn more about it. Unlike other K-Staters who traveled for spring break, the two said they stayed in Manhattan last week, "just waiting for the flowers," Ng said jokingly.

Putin projected winner of Russian election

By BARRY RENFREW
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Vladimir Putin appeared headed for a narrow victory today in Russia's presidential election after a surprisingly strong showing by the Communists threatened to force him into a runoff vote.

While Putin almost would certainly win a second round, it would have been a humbling setback for the former KGB officer, who has soared from nowhere to become the nation's most popular politician in a few months. Putin's call to strengthen the authority of the state and the security forces worried some Russians, who fear the country's democratic reforms could be rolled back.

With 59 percent of the vote from Sunday's election counted by early Monday, Putin had 50.67 percent of the vote, just enough to ensure outright victory and avoid a second round against the next highest vote winner. Communist chief Gennady Zyuganov was second with 30.51 percent.

The state-run RTR TV network predicted an outright Putin victory with no runoff vote. Liberal economist Grigory Yavlinsky was projected to take third place with about 7 percent of the vote.

Zyuganov accused the government of falsifying the results, saying the Communist vote was more than 40 percent. There were no immediate reports on the fairness of the election from international monitors.

"They have set up a zone of blanket fraud to cheat citizens," Zyuganov said.

Putin looked likely to fall well short of his campaign's hopes for a huge victory and a strong mandate for his call to impose strong government at home and to revive Russia as a global power.

Putin's campaign might have suffered from the widespread assumption that he would win, convincing many of his supporters that there was no need to vote. But the fairly strong vote for Zyuganov also was seen as a protest by Russians unhappy about Putin's apparently inevitable victory.

Putin, looking relaxed, said he was confident of victory as he voted at a Moscow polling station. "Tomorrow is Monday, a hard day, and I will have to go to work," he said.

Putin later acknowledged the Communists had done well despite their cash-strapped campaign and that his government would have to take popular discontent into account.

"That means that our policy must be more balanced, take into account the existing realities and aim at increasing living standards," he said in a news conference.

The tough, man-of-action image that Putin cultivates appeals to many Russians, tired of the uncertainty and mayhem of the final years of former President Boris Yeltsin. Putin has promised to end massive corruption, revive the economy after years of recession and restore the political and military influence that Moscow wielded before the Soviet collapse.

"I'm tired of all this disorder,"

Engineering college fees to change

By CRISTINA JANNEY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Engineering is changing the way it structures its technology fee, which means some students who do not pay the fee now will start paying the fee in fall 2001.

Instead of engineering majors paying a flat fee of $100, all students who take engineering courses would pay $14 per credit hour plus the $1 per-credit-hour fee that all K-State students already pay.

Agriculture technology students such as Jeff Morgan said they are frustrated that they now must pay the fee when they don't always use the technology the fee is paying for.

"I think it will hurt the department and students in general," said Morgan, junior in agriculture technology management.

He said he knew the college needed money for technology, but he just thought it was going about it in the wrong way. He said he thought the cost of technology should be spread across campus and not focused on one major.

Engineering students in leadership positions in the college have voted their approval of the fee structure change. Cory Lafferty, president of the Dean's Student Advisory Council, said engineering students thought students who use the equipment should help pay for it.

Morgan said some agriculture students might shy away from the ag technology management

Prize-winning writer, editor to give lecture

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pulitzer Prize winner Bob Woodward will deliver the first Landon Lecture of 2000 at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

Woodward, who serves as the assistant managing editor for investigative news at The Washington Post, earned his Pulitzer through his work with partner Carl Bernstein. The story the two produced for the Post led to the exposure of Richard Nixon's involvement in 1972's Watergate scandal.

The speaker's career also has involved the publication of many political and biographical novels, with subjects such as President Clinton and former "Saturday Night Live" star John Belushi.

The author and editor's visit to K-State is timely due to the release of a new novel by Woodward, said Edward Seaton, chairman of the Landon Lectures Series patrons.

"He's in between books at the moment, so it was a little easier to get ahold of him," Seaton said. "We would have taken him years ago if he'd had the time."

Charles Reagan, chairman of the lecture series and associate to President Jon Wefald, said Woodward accepted his invitation to speak at K-State last semester.

"He called me last fall and said he'd like to do it," he said.

Landon lecturers are chosen due to their prominence in public affairs, with speakers ranging from foreign leaders to leading journalists, Reagan said.

"We have a long list of people who are poten-

International students improve English skills

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The student from Finland was upset.

Loree Lewandowski, sophomore in psychology, was supposed to take him to the optometrist so he could buy some contact lenses. But when he looked back, Lewandowski was in her car.

"I saw him talking to himself, and he seemed mad," Lewandowski said. "He looked over, and he thought I had left him."

They both started laughing when they realized that once again, cultural differences had caused different responses.

People always walk in Finland, and so he is still getting used to how much Americans drive, she said.

Lewandowski is in Introduction to Linguistic Anthropology, where students are paired with a non-English-speaking student from the English language program. The students usually meet once a week to help the international students improve their English.

"It's one of the nicest things that could happen for our students," Mary Wood, English language program director, said.

"It's very hard when you're speaking a second language to get up the courage and talk to people you don't know," she said.

"This gives our students a nice, safe, warm, friendly situation in which they can approach Americans and practice their speaking and learn about American culture."

Maria Mateos, a Mexican graduate student in plant pathology, said this program is a good opportunity to learn more.

She said she is taking English classes to improve her listening and writing, and she volunteered in that class to participate in this program.

"I have so many ideas, but I find myself not being able to communicate them."

"It's very hard. I find myself obligated to learn English faster," Mateos said.

But it's not easy to help them learn English, said Megan Switzer, freshman in speech pathology and student in the linguistics class.

Switzer is paired with a student from South Korea who has started to learn English.

"It's hard. You just have to use your hands a lot," Switzer said.

"It's really frustrating when he doesn't understand what you're saying," she said.

Harriet Ottenheimer, professor of anthropology, started this program 10 or 15 years ago. She said she wanted students to apply concepts they were learning about in her linguistics class.

"It's a real, everyday kind of situation," she said. "They work with a real person who spoke a real language that was different from their own."

Ottenheimer said every student in her class has a different challenge, because those enrolled in the English language program have different skill levels.

"Some are graduate students whose English needs a little polishing, and others came to K-State to learn English," she said.

Wood said students in her program love the project.

"One Japanese student had said she was looking at three or four universities, and she chose K-State because of the program," she said.

Ottenheimer said responses from international students have been positive.

It has been so positive that American students have helped them bargain for a car, become their roommates or even get invited to their weddings.

"It's a nice opportunity for them to meet an American student," Ottenheimer said.

"It provides them someone, especially if they're a little shy about meeting people on their own. It provides them a contact person," she said.

But international students aren't the only ones who are learning.

In addition to learning about the differences in sound systems between languages, linguistic students also learn about their partners' backgrounds.

"It's hard to understand what the people are saying, but it's interesting to learn about their culture," Switzer said.

When Lewandowski first met her Finnish partner at Espresso Royale Latte, he had prepared a folder on Finland for her.

"He speaks four languages," she said. "He actually teaches me a lot."

Pillsbury Crossing, a natural, flat-rock bed, was donated to the Wildlife and Parks department in 1967 by Dr. and Mrs. E.J. Frick. The crossing offers visitors a chance to view nature and a hiking trail.

Pillsbury Crossing offers recreation options

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was the drunken people who burned down the camping tables in the 1970s who did it.

After this incident, the Department of Wildlife and Parks outlawed camping at Pillsbury Crossing, said conservation worker Larry Mull.

But Pillsbury Crossing has not lost its appeal.

"It's pretty popular," Mull said. "There are a lot of bird watchers and nature lovers who go there."

A long, winding, inconspicuous dirt road leads to the natural, flat-rock bed. Vehicles can cross the shallow part, which extends into a river on the right. To the left is a small waterfall and a cave behind it.

This area was donated to the wildlife and parks department in 1967 by Dr. and Mrs. E.J. Frick. The farm surrounding the creek was donated to the College of Veterinary Medicine.

John Noordsy, a retired professor of veterinary medicine, said faculty members used the place as a research facility and to enjoy themselves, too.

"I think it's a very picturesque place," he said. "In the 1940s, we used to go out there to wash cars and have fun."

The veterinary medicine college no longer uses the place for research or anything else, said Patricia Stewart, interim director of the animal resources facility.

In the past, she said, they had someone who would cut hay out there, and there used to be a student living there.

No one is living there now, but plenty of students still visit the area. Stacey Dunlap, a visitor from the University of Illinois, said she loved the place.

"It's really pretty and relaxing," she said. "The cool thing is that you can drive out over the creek."

The crossing also is one of the few spots in the state where spotted bass occur naturally, Mull said. A lot of people come to fish, but swimming no longer is allowed because of liability, he said.

In addition to fishing, the place also has a nature trail that was created by the Environmental League in 1998. In addition, the League put up benches, tables and a code of ethics.

The area was first settled in 1854 by J.H. Pillsbury, a pioneer who came to Kansas because it was a free state. Although it used to be his home, now the crossing caters to students who come to study or have fun.

Kevin Combs, junior in mechanical engineering, said he came because of a friend's recommendation.

He said he would come just to hang out but not to study.

"With engineering, you need a desk and a calculator," he said. "With a lawn chair and a beer, you'd never get anything done here."

A comedy about fear of commitment.

Students should buckle down after week of rest, sun

The party is over. Everyone has had their week in the sun — or maybe just a week here in Manhattan. Regardless of where it was spent, it is in the past. Students have had their opportunity to kick back and relax, work to earn some extra money or get caught up on school work. However your break was spent, the important thing is that it was not spent in school. One week away from the drag of classes can be refreshing to the mind, body and soul. It provides everyone a chance to recuperate and prepare for the remainder of the semester. With the recuperating and preparation complete, it's time to get down to business. The week of fun is over, and the pain is about to start again, only a greatly intensified pain.

All of the distractions that existed before spring break — warmer weather, boredom, friends, parties and sleep — will all be calling a little louder as the semester wears on. With so many reasons to divert attention from school, the ability to focus will be important down the home stretch. Without it, grades will undoubtedly slip to undesirable levels.

As the semester drags on at its slowing pace, remember why you are here at K-State. For almost everyone, that is to get an education. If that is, indeed, why you are here, try to keep that tucked in the back of your mind. Next time you want to sleep through that 9:30 a.m. class, force yourself out of bed. When boredom sets in, convince yourself to keep studying. If your friends call, explain your dedication and skip the party. When a beautiful spring day beckons, calling for you to skip your afternoon classes, do it. But not too often. After all, there are just some things you can't pass up.

Spring break provides vacation from fourums, religious columns

Welcome back from spring break. I'm sure it was a nice break from school. I think it was a welcome break, because it gave us a rest from each other. There were no columns to read or infuriate, and there was no Campus Fourum to infuriate writers.

So, as a welcome-back column, I have a proposition for both readers and columnists: I propose we use the break from each other as an opportunity to forget about the past. In other words, let's move on.

I've been noticing a trend lately on the Opinion page. I've noticed some of us have fallen into a monotonous rut. Columnists are writing about the same thing week after week, and students are responding with the same complaints week after week.

For example, there have been numerous articles regarding religion. We've had extremes on both ends of the spectrum. Some readers become infuriated by these views. They then call in and leave scathing remarks for everyone to see.

As journalists, we are granted freedom of press. We are all, as Americans, granted freedom of speech, so Fourum callers are covered, too. And, as citizens of the United States, we all are granted freedom of religion. Therefore, if Jeff Elliott or Scott Roney wants to write about his faith in God, he can. If David Levin wants to respond with a different view, that is his prerogative.

Similarly, if there is a student out there who thinks one of these people is absolutely wrong, he or she has the right to say so. This is the beauty of living in the United States.

However, one only can read the same ideas so many times. There does come a point when the topic is exhausted. Furthermore, with the religion topic, there never will be an end. It is a vicious cycle.

A columnist will write an article about the religion of his or her choice. This will irritate somebody who will then call in and complain. After numerous complaints (some of which are just plain mean), the columnist feels compelled to respond with yet another article defending the same idea. Although a different spin might be put on it, the content still is basically the same.

The only way to move on is to put an end to it now. Why don't we all agree to disagree, so we can get on with our lives?

The topic of religion never will have a unanimous view. No two people think exactly alike. There are no conclusions to the arguments that are being given by both sides, and there should not be.

Religious freedom and tolerance is a key element of life in the United States. It is the reason people move from their native countries to ours. Thus, we simply need to let it go. As journalists for the Collegian, we have an amazing opportunity to spread our views across the entire campus. More than 20,000 people have the chance to read what we think.

We should not limit ourselves to one topic. If we don't take full advantage of our position to open people's eyes, we are abusing it.

There are many things going on around us of which people are not aware. There are also many angles and pieces to the stories that we could let students know about. They then can respond with something new, because I can only hear about how wrong Elliott, Roney and others are for so long.

For the most part, every adult human being already is aware of religion and the differences in opinion.

The topics of our column are no surprise to anyone.

I'm trying to say they should be.

Purpose, direction disprove evolution, show fingerprint of God

In my last column, I discussed the history of science and the worldview it grew out of. I want first to respond to some objections.

I said science grew out of a Christian worldview; however, Jews and Muslims also share the beliefs I described. During the Dark Ages, the Arabs made great strides in science and mathematics. The ancient Greeks made many mathematical discoveries, but did not believe math could describe the natural world because they thought nature was not subject to any rigid laws.

To believe evolution has direction and purpose is to disagree with nearly every significant evolutionary scientist on the planet. Says Gould, "Before Darwin, we thought that a benevolent God had created us. ... whatever we think of God, his existence is not manifest in the products of nature."

Says Richard Dawkins of Oxford University, "Natural selection is the blind watchmaker, blind because it does not see ahead, does not plan consequences, has no purpose in view."

Evolutionary geneticist Theodosius Dobzhansky, George Gaylord Simpson, Julian Huxley, Ernst Mayr, Douglas Futuyma, Daniel Dennett of Tufts University, and William Provine of Cornell University are all in agreement that evolution leaves no room for God and is thoroughly directionless and purposeless. Someone who claims otherwise does not truly understand evolution.

Science has done wonderful things for humanity, but this is not a proof of evolution. Not all pronouncements made in the name of science are equally valid. As Philip Johnson observes, "We believe in the efficacy of electricity and penicillin on the basis of experimental verification; many of us disbelieve claims that scientists know how life originated because we know how inadequate the experimental evidence is to justify those claims."

An excellent example is the book "The Beak of the Finch," by Jonathan Weiner. Weiner claims he saw "evolution in action" on the Galapagos Islands. He observed the size of finches' beaks varied from generation to generation depending on weather conditions and the availability of food.

But this tells us absolutely nothing about where finches came from. In fact it is strong evidence for the creation of distinct kinds by an incredibly intelligent God. It demonstrates the creativity, wisdom and foresight of a creator who would design finches capable of adapting themselves to diverse conditions while remaining finches.

It is now recognized that archaeopteryx was fully a bird (Science, Feb. 5, 1993). The so-called horse series does not occur anywhere in the world in successive geological strata, though in South America part of it occurs in reverse.

Biologists Paul and Anne Ehrlich report, "The production of a new animal species in nature has yet to be documented" (Extinction, 1981). That is still the case.

It is for reasons such as these that many people, including scientists and philosophers of science, reject evolution. A good example is University of California-Berkeley law professor Phillip Johnson. During a 1987 sabbatical, he bought several books about evolution, intending to learn more about the subject. He was astonished to discover how flawed the reasoning was and how flimsy the evidence was. He since has written the best-selling book "Darwin on Trial," as well as a critique of the effects of evolutionary philosophy called "Reason in the Balance."

In 1996, Michael Behe, professor of biochemistry at Lehigh University, released his book, "Darwin's Black Box: The Biochemical Challenge to Evolution." The Seattle-based think tank Discovery Center recently formed the Center for the Renewal of Science and Culture. The center's main aim is to develop the theory of intelligent design and to argue against naturalistic philosophy as a basis for science. Included among the center's 29 fellows is Nobel nominee and renowned quantum chemist Henry Schaefer III, who from 1984 to 1991 was the third most cited chemist in the world. Stephen C. Meyer, who earned a doctorate in history and Philosophy of Science from Cambridge University, directs the center.

I have space to mention only a few of the many notable scientists who reject evolution and accept creation. Among them are astrophysicist Hugh Ross, who founded the organization Reasons to Believe; David R. Boylan, professor of chemical engineering and former dean of engineering at Iowa State University; William Dembski, author of "The Design Inference" and recipient of two doctorates, one in math and one in philosophy; and Colin Patterson, senior vertebrate paleontologist of the British Field Museum of Natural History. Patterson likes to ask his audiences, "Is there anything you know about evolution — any one thing — that is true?" He usually is met by silence.

In 1 Thessalonians 5:21, we are told, "Test everything. Hold on to the good." (Sounds a lot like the scientific method to me). That's why I accept that God created the universe; it's why I reject non-science such as spontaneous generation and macroevolution; and it's why everywhere I look in nature I see the fingerprint of God.

In-state tuition should be awarded to student suing

Editor,

This letter is in response to the student who is taking K-State to court for in-state tuition rates.

As a recent graduate of K-State, and also a spouse of an active-duty military man, I find it completely absurd that the university is going to make this young man pay out-of-state tuition rates just because his father no longer is stationed at Fort Riley.

If I remember correctly, all you have to do to be considered a resident of the state of Kansas is to have a driver's license issued from the state and possibly live there for six months. If this is indeed the fact, then Brian Jindra doesn't need to worry about this, he has an open-and-shut case. It would seem to me that someone who works in the state, has a Kansas driver's license and also has his vehicle registered there should not have to pay out-of-state tuition fees.

I wish you the best of luck, Jindra. I know the hassle you have gone through for the past few years.

Ahearn proper church for KSU basketball faithful

Editor,

Basketball, for many, is a religion. Like the recent television ad, it has its churches, its temples. It has its priests and prophets.

Manhattan is no different. We have had our preachers — Tex Winter, Lon Kruger and Jack Hartman.

We have had our disciples — Steve Henson, Rolando Blackman, Mitch Richmond, and many, many others.

We even have had our own proud chapel, where the sermons made those who opposed us tremble — Ahearn Field House.

In the time I have been on this hallowed ground, I have witnessed us forsake our own basketball religion.

First, we succumbed to our pride, and built a larger, grander church. We had reached our apex. A few short months prior, our hopes and dreams were dashed in Detroit, but we were sure a larger place to worship would carry us to the promised land. Bramlage Coliseum's location was fitting to its place in our souls, however, while Ahearn was the heart of our congregation, this new Coliseum was far from the warmth of its worshippers. I even took part in this folly. I helped march our proud banner into that building one cold midnight in 1988. I felt the adulation of those who would fill it. But even that first night, the change was evident.

Where the congregation was close to the altar in Ahearn and could feel the fire from the pulpit, the distance of this new place reflected both the arrogance of this new church and the impending apathy of its followers in the days ahead. Although the cheers and shouting masked the future, it was clear that we had lost our way that late fall night. Never since has the success of the prior times graced our presence.

The altar stands silent, the fall winds bring cheers still farther away from the heart, for another deity arrived that same year from Iowa and built a temple dedicated to another religion, football. But there are those of us who still worship, who still feel, who remember the passion for our cause that would drive the faithful to charge onto the court to tackle a feathered mascot from down the road.

There are those of us who remember too well, the banners that have been placed in a hollowed-out shell of what once was.

Jim Wooldridge, it is your duty, as the shepherd of this troubled flock, to lead us back to glory. We have strayed far from the path. But for many, our memory of being part of the 64 favored few has not yet disappeared. Nothing else is acceptable. Ask of us what you might to accomplish the task at hand, but know that we will not allow our temple to be defiled any further.

Do not allow purple blood to stain black and gold or red and blue altars any longer.

We were not meant to be sacrifices to them.

'Beauty' tops Oscar list

Singer Phil Collins performs Sunday during the 72nd Academy Awards at the Shrine Auditorium in Los Angeles. Collins won an Oscar for Best Original Song for "You'll Be in My Heart," from "Tarzan."

'American Beauty' brings home 5 Academy Awards

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES — "American Beauty," a dark comedy about suburban alienation and family dysfunction, won five Academy Awards on Sunday night, including best picture, best director, Sam Mendes; and best actor, Kevin Spacey.

"This is the highlight of my day. I hope it is not all downhill from here," Spacey said jokingly, a reference to the film's opening. It was his second Oscar — he won for best supporting actor of 1995 for "The Usual Suspects."

Alan Ball picked up the Oscar for original screenplay, and Conrad L. Hall won as the film's cinematographer.

Hilary Swank, who portrayed a woman passing as a man in "Boys Don't Cry," won the best actress award.

"Everyone put their heart and their soul into this movie," Swank said.

She thanked the real-life inspiration for her role, Brandon Teena, saying: "His legacy lives on through our movie to remind us to always be ourselves, to follow our hearts, to not conform. I pray for the day when we not only accept our differences, but we actually celebrate our diversity."

Michael Caine, the kindly orphanage headmaster in "The Cider House Rules," won his second best supporting actor Oscar. Angelina Jolie, the disruptive mental patient in "Girl, Interrupted," won for supporting actress — a generation after her father, Jon Voight, took home an Oscar.

"The Matrix," the story of a computer hacker who discovers life is a big illusion, won four Oscars — for film editing, sound, sound effects editing and visual effects.

"The Cider House Rules" also won the adapted screenplay Oscar for John Irving, who wrote the novel.

Caine, 67, who previously won as supporting actor for "Hannah and Her Sisters" in 1986, seemed overwhelmed by the applause that greeted the announcement by Judi Dench, and he saluted his fellow nominees.

The 24-year-old Jolie thanked her father, a best actor winner for 1978's "Coming Home" and a nominee for 1969's "Midnight Cowboy," saying: "You're a great actor, but a better father."

Pop star Phil Collins scored the best original song award for his sentimental "You'll Be in My Heart" from the animated Disney film "Tarzan." It was his first win in three nominations.

The award followed a rousing performance of the bawdy "Blame Canada" from "South Park: Bigger, Longer & Uncut." Robin Williams led the chorus in a production number, even though the show's producers swore there would be none.

Finder of Oscars plays it low-key at award show

By ANTHONY BREZNICAN

LOS ANGELES — The junkman-savior of 52 stolen Oscars has gone from litter to glitterati in one week.

Willie Fulgear, donning a black top-hat with his tuxedo, smiled and waved to the crowd when host Billy Crystal introduced him at the start of the show.

Crystal pointed out that Fulgear was given a $50,000 reward for finding the Oscars.

"That's not a lot of money when you figure Miramax and Dreamworks are spending millions of dollars to get one," Crystal quipped.

The 61-year-old Koreatown resident found the purloined statuettes stacked beside a trash bin about a block from his home.

Fulgear, planning to move from his one-room apartment, said he was rummaging through the garbage for packing boxes when he made his golden find.

A self-described "poor man," Fulgear said he intended to use the reward as a down payment on a house.

Once investigators were certain he had nothing to do with the theft of the missing Oscars, Fulgear got his other reward — two invitations to Sunday's awards show.

He took his 22-year-old son, Allen, to the black-tie event.

"A lot of people want to know what the stars are thinking about during the show," Crystal said to introduce a segment called "What Are They Thinking?"

When the camera showed Willie Fulgear in the audience, Crystal imagined him thinking: "This is cool, but what I really want to do is direct."

EUROPEAN TENNIS PLAYERS FIND HOME IN KANSAS

STORY BY SAM STIERS ■ PHOTOS BY JUSTIN HAYWORTH

K-State's women's tennis team is a showcase of global talent this season. All seven athletes on the roster hail from Europe — one from England, two from Bulgaria and four from the Czech Republic.

Moving to the United States has presented challenges for the athletes as they not only must cope with moving away from home but to a new culture.

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau said there are some skills his athletes must possess before they arrive in Manhattan.

The athletes must all show a proficiency in the English language before they are accepted into K-State's program and are required to speak English during practice.

Assistant coach Dinah Watson, a native of England, also played for the Cats from 1995 to 1998. She said cultural differences are often hard to adjust to.

"I knew the language, all the girls do, but it's a different culture," Watson said. "It doesn't seem like it, but it's a different lifestyle. It's the small things that seem like the biggest changes."

Junior Anna Pampoulova is from Bulgaria, and she said the bond developed between the athletes helps them acclimate to K-State.

"What really helped me was the rest of the girls," Pampoulova said. "I didn't know them, but being around them in practice all the time and that most of them were from Europe helped me a lot."

The stabilizing force for all of the athletes is tennis.

"On the tennis court, everyone is the same," Watson said. "Whether you're English, American or from a country that speaks a different language, tennis is tennis."

Bietau always has recruited from the global talent pool. Both of the All-American players he has coached at K-State were from overseas.

"The sport is very international," Bietau said. "We want to find student athletes who are looking to get a college education and who can contribute to our program. We'll go to wherever we need to to accomplish that."

Bietau said it is hard to find quality tennis players in the Midwest because he said so many other sports take precedent over tennis.

"In the Czech Republic, tennis is the third most popular sport behind hockey and soccer," Bietau said. "Here in the states, tennis ranks much lower."

Bietau said he only spends a small amount of time traveling and relies on a network of contacts to find and recruit players. Many foreign players take the initiative and apply to universities in the United States. Pampoulova wrote letters to several universities in America before she decided on K-State.

"I came to K-State because I liked the program and the coach," Pampoulova said.

Tennis is a worldwide sport, and Bietau said he doesn't expect the trend of recruiting from around the world to slow down any time soon.

"I definitely see it continuing," Bietau said. "The sport is just too popular across the world, and there are so many good athletes worldwide."

Wooldridge announces assistants

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge has wasted little time in assembling his coaching staff.

Wooldridge last week announced the hirings of coaches Mike Miller, Robbie Laing and Charles Baker. He said each one of the coaches brings with him different attributes.

Miller comes to K-State after six seasons as the head coach at Southwest Texas State, and he was named an associate head coach. Wooldridge said Miller will be a valuable piece of the coaching staff.

"We are very excited to welcome Mike into the K-State family," Wooldridge said. "He has proven that he is a very successful coach, and he will bring a great deal of experience and enthusiasm into the program."

"He has experienced a great deal of success as Southwest Texas, and we are sure that it will relate to what we are trying to do here."

It is the second time Miller has served as an assistant coach to Wooldridge. He served as Wooldridge's assistant at Southwest Texas for three seasons, before taking the head coaching reins.

Laing has experience coaching at a variety of schools. He joins the K-State coaching staff after serving as the recruiting coordinator at Southern Mississippi last season.

"I feel very fortunate to have someone with Robbie's experience and success join our coaching staff," Wooldridge said. "He has proven himself to be very successful recruiting at the highest collegiate level, and he will open some doors for us at Kansas State."

Before going to Southern Miss Laing was an assistant coach at Auburn, where he helped sign All-American Chris Porter.

Another piece of the puzzle is Baker, who has been a head coach at the community-college level and an assistant coach at Louisiana Tech. Wooldridge said Baker is a welcome addition to the K-State staff.

"We are excited to have someone with the coaching experience that Charles has to join us at Kansas State," Wooldridge said. "He has experienced success as a head coach at Shorter Junior College and has been very successful as an assistant coach at the Division I level."

It is unknown whether Baker will be the final addition to the K-State staff.

Baseball team loses to Texas during break

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While most of the K-State student body was relaxing during spring break, the K-State baseball team played six games in 10 days, finishing the stretch with a 2-4 record.

K-State (7-16 overall, 1-10 Big 12) first encountered fourth-ranked Texas last weekend at home but lost both games to the Longhorns, further cementing the Cats in last place in the Big 12 Conference.

Paced by a 16-hit attack, Texas pounded the Wildcats 14-2 in the series opener. Sophomore Luke Robertson (1-4) took the loss for the Cats, allowing 11 runs on 14 hits, while striking out five and walking two.

Junior third baseman Josh Cavender had two of K-State's seven hits and scored both Cat runs.

Saturday's scheduled game was rained out, but Texas lost no momentum from the first game and handed K-State its second straight double-digit loss with a 15-3 score Sunday.

Senior pitcher Jason Wells (0-5) threw a 2 2/3 innings in losing the decision. He allowed six runs, three earned, on eight hits while striking out three and walking six.

K-State struggled from the plate again, mustering only three hits against Texas while striking out 12 times as a team.

The Cats opened the first round of the Homestead Challenge in Homestead, Fla. on Thursday with a convincing 17-7 win against Central Connecticut, snapping the Cats' four-game losing skid.

K-State junior catcher Nick Scelfo, appearing in only his seventh game of the season, went 3-for-5 from the plate with a three-run homer and seven runs batted in to lead K-State to its highest run total of the season.

Sophomore Chad Duckers (2-1) came on in relief of Wells in the fifth inning and threw four innings of shutout ball, allowing three hits and striking out four.

K-State's winning streak was stopped at one when the Wildcats lost to Ohio State 8-4 on Saturday.

Robertson's record dropped to 1-5 on the year as he allowed seven runs on 10 hits, while striking out six in seven innings.

Cavender again led the Cats from the plate, going 3-for-5 on the day with his fourth home run of the year, while also adding another RBI.

K-State jumped back into the win column Saturday when junior catcher Graham McAllister singled home junior shortstop J.D. Loudabarger in the bottom of the 10th inning to give the Wildcats a 3-2 victory.

Sports affect more people than Hollywood

NICK BRATKOVIC

Spring break is officially over, and I am sure it is a harsh reality as you chug down cappuccino and try to stay awake in class. Just think — a few days ago you were taking it easy, possibly in some far-off land, trying to get a tan. Well, now it is back to the grindstone for a few more weeks.

Let me officially welcome you back to Manhattan.

Now, don't all of you cheer at once. I am sure that you are tired of cheering after a great weekend of basketball and a night at the Oscars. The Oscars are Hollywood's biggest night, and it is a night when the world truly centers around the area.

But if you look closely enough, it is easy to see a lot of glaring double standards. They are double standards that transcend the ceremony, all 1,000 hours of it, but they take us through the mass media and beyond.

The double standards of the pedestal on which we put these stars are different from the rules governing professional athletes.

Think about it. If an athlete such as Darryl Strawberry uses cocaine and continues to indulge himself in drugs, he is berated. Now Strawberry is serving a lengthy suspension, and why? Because he likes drugs. As a country, America is appalled that a well-paid athlete could throw his career away.

Conversely, let's take a look at the world of Hollywood, a place where stars live the wild life and walk the red carpet. It is a world where actors often find themselves in and out of rehab.

If a person needs help, then he or she should receive it, but why are stars looked at differently? Why is it a tragedy if Robert Downey Jr. goes into rehab again, yet Strawberry is chastised because of an addiction?

In reality, the reason is simple: because the athletes who came before Strawberry and this age of the multi-million-dollar athlete set a higher standard.

They knew how to conduct themselves, or at least not get caught, and they were — despite their faults — still heroes.

In previous generations, you could count on the great ones. The athletes often seemed larger than life.

That hasn't always been the case for the movie stars, who always have seemed to have a reputation of living in another world.

So is it fair to Strawberry that this double standard exists? Maybe not, but who cares? In reality, life isn't fair, and this is one double standard that America needs to keep because sports is interwoven with this society.

A sports franchise symbolizes a city by the way it plays, and it embodies the human imagination much more than a film ever could. Kansas City would not be the same if the Chiefs ever left, and Green Bay would be just another town without the Packers.

The same thing could not be said for motion picture "American Beauty," a highly regarded film this year. It is a decent movie but is anyone's life really that much different after watching it? No. Regardless of whether you saw the movie, it really won't affect your life as sports do.

Sports are set up to create a double standard because athletes represent a city. So each time a player gets arrested or in trouble with the law, he or she is putting a dent in the armor, or a cloud over the town.

Now, I realize that it might sound like a lot of responsibility and maybe we expect too much, but in reality these athletes are laughing all the way to the bank.

Drake Group aims to reform college athletics

By MIKE BRANOM
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES, Iowa — Determined to cleanse their campuses of what they say is corruption caused by big money in college athletics, some academics and administrators are moving to take back their classrooms.

The Drake Group — named for the university where the organization first gathered in October — passed five proposals Saturday aimed at regaining control of academics.

"I want the same protection for my classroom that a coach has for his practices," said Jon Ericson, a rhetoric and communications professor at Drake.

The reform group is aiming for:

- Eliminating the term "student-athlete."
- Removing academic counseling from the control of athletic departments and abandoning the practice of providing academic support on the basis of athletic status.

- Public disclosure of academic information for all students, including academic major, academic adviser, courses and instructors. No individual's grades shall be released.

- Reducing the number of games.

- Eliminating athletic scholarships while expanding the availability of need-based aid.

"These go to the heart of the matter of preserving academic integrity," said Terry Knapp, a psychology professor at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas. "They aren't concerned about preserving the money; they're concerned about conserving integrity."

The proposals will be sent to the faculty senates at NCAA Division I universities, the American Association of University Professors and other academic organizations.

"We are primarily a faculty group so, therefore, we believe we should begin reform with ourselves," Ericson said.

OSU knocked out by Florida, 77-65

By JIM O'CONNELL
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Florida filled the final spot in one of the most unlikely Final Fours in years, wearing down yet another higher-seeded team.

With seven sophomores and freshmen in the 10-man rotation, the fifth-seeded Gators beat third-seeded Oklahoma State and its seven seniors 77-65 Sunday in the East Regional final.

Led by 34-year-old coach Billy Donovan, the Gators will play resurgent North Carolina, which beat Tulsa 59-55 in the South Regional final Saturday in Indianapolis. Wisconsin, an eighth seed like North Carolina, will play Michigan State, the only No. 1 seed left, in the other semifinal.

The Gators' only other trip to the Final Four was in 1994, when most of the current players were in grade school and Donovan was about to become the youngest head coach in Division I at Marshall.

Using the same press that wore down fourth-seeded Illinois in the second round and top-seeded Duke in the regional semifinals, Florida (28-7) forced Oklahoma State (27-7) into turnovers and also wore the Cowboys down, especially point guard Doug Gottlieb, who looked exhausted in the first half from trying to constantly beat the pressure.

A 10-0 run gave the Gators a 33-18 lead with 9:39 left in the first half and they were up 43-31 at halftime.

Twice in the second half Oklahoma State, which starts four seniors but was facing its first single-digit seed in the tournament, came up with runs to make it close, but the Gators didn't fold.

Desmond Mason and Glendon Alexander hit 3-pointers in a 9-0 run that brought the Cowboys within 50-42 with 14:12 left, but Donovan called a timeout, changed all five players, and the lead was back to 54-42 after Oklahoma State turned the ball over on three consecutive possessions.

Alexander hit another 3 to cap a 7-0 run that made it 56-53 with 7:56 left, but Florida scored the next seven points.

2 No. 8 seeds make it to Final Four

By HAL BOCK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two long-shot teams who were on the NCAA Tournament bubble two weeks ago are headed for the Final Four, along with the last No. 1 seed in the field and a racehorse team that nearly went out in the first round.

North Carolina and Wisconsin, both No. 8 seeds, join No. 1 seed Michigan State and No. 5 Florida in the climax of the college basketball season with the national semifinals set for next Saturday at the RCA Dome in Indianapolis.

For the Tar Heels and Badgers, the Final Four berths are payoffs for peaking at the end of difficult seasons. For the Spartans and Gators, the trip to Indianapolis is an opportunity to punctuate successful seasons.

At No. 8, Wisconsin and North Carolina are the lowest seeds to reach the Final Four since No. 11 LSU made it in 1986. The last No. 8 to get this far was Villanova, which won the national championship from that spot in 1985.

Wisconsin (22-13) vs. Michigan State (30-7)

Wisconsin finished sixth in the Big Ten but has lost just three games since Feb. 2, all of them to conference champion Michigan State, winners of nine straight.

"We haven't figured out a way to score against them yet," coach Dick Bennett said. "Michigan State is one of the premier defensive teams in the country. They're hard to score against."

Michigan State coach Tom Izzo knows the three earlier games don't matter much now against a Wisconsin team that is in the Final Four for the first time in 59 years.

"I don't think it's ever easy to beat a team twice or beat a team three times," he said. "We know it's going to be tough to beat a team four times. They are on a roll and making shots now."

These are two grind-it-out teams, with Michigan State depending on the senior leadership of Mateen Cleaves, Charlie Bell and Morris Peterson, and Wisconsin riding the hot three-point shooting of Division II transfer Jon Bryant.

Take it from Mike Kelley, the Badgers aren't going to roll over now.

"We had a chance for a letdown after Fresno State, after Arizona, and after LSU," he said. "We could have fallen to that temptation, but we didn't. We are a very competitive group. It doesn't matter if it is basketball or bridge, we all go out to win."

North Carolina (22-13) vs. Florida (28-7)

For the Tar Heels, this marks a 15th trip to the Final Four and third in the past four years. It was one of the least expected. Coach Bill Guthridge was under fire during a difficult 13-loss season that had some people believing North Carolina would not be invited.

The Tar Heels stumbled in with four losses in six games and a 7-8 record in the season's final weeks. Their No. 8 seed matched their lowest in 22 years of being seeded. They had been a No. 1 or 2 seed in their previous seven Final Fours.

"Obviously, since we were an eighth seed, this was unexpected," Guthridge said. "But I believed, and the team believed, and that's why we're going."

The four-game winning streak in the tournament was the first all season for North Carolina. "We became a team and started playing together," senior point guard Ed Cota said.

Seven-foot Brendan Haywood gives North Carolina a presence inside, and Joseph Forte is the first freshman in school history to lead the Tar Heels in scoring.

And, yes, that includes a fellow named Michael Jordan.

Under fourth-year coach Billy Donovan, Florida turns games into track meets with a go-go style and a freshman-sophomore-dominated roster that can sustain it.

McAllister and freshman designated hitter Pat Maloney each had three hits on the day for K-State, while Loudabarger went 2-for-5 with two doubles, two RBIs and the game-ending run.

Todd Lundwall (1-0) pitched a 10-inning complete game in his first start as a Wildcat to pick up the win. He allowed seven hits, while striking out seven Harvard batters.

K-State lost the final game of the tournament Sunday to Harvard, 4-1.

Duckers pitched seven strong innings for the Wildcats, but his record fell to 2-2 for the year. The southpaw allowed only two earned runs on six hits, while striking out seven.

The Wildcats managed just seven hits on the afternoon, led by junior outfielder Kasey Weishaar and Maloney, who had two hits apiece.

FEES

major because of the new fees.

James Koelliker, head of the Department of Biological and Agricultural Engineering, disagreed with Morgan on the fee.

He said students who see the true value of the program will stay.

"It's like the raise in gas prices," Koelliker said. "You stand and look at the prices, but eventually you fill up the tank."

Koelliker said it was only fair that the agriculture technology management students help pay for the engineering equipment they use.

"Engineering students have subsidized the ATM students," he said. "They get to use better equipment because engineering students paid the fee."

The new fee structure will be more equitable to all students, allowing better equipment to be purchased for all students, he said.

"That stuff doesn't just fall out of the sky, and we're not blessed with an overabundance of resources from the state," Koelliker said.

Ray Hightower, assistant dean of engineering, said the primary reason the college is going to a per-credit-hour fee is that the university went to per-credit-hour fees.

The University of Kansas and Wichita State University already have similar fees, he said.

The fee change is not meant to raise the amount of money paid by engineering students. Engineering students initially will pay less as they take core courses outside of their major. As they take more engineering courses, they will pay more.

"They might pay more in a single semester, but the total will all come out about the same," Hightower said.

Keeping up with the current equipment and technology is vital to the college, both Koelliker and Hightower said. A recent survey of grads and employers found that proficiency with technology was one of the top skills needed in the work force.

The fees go to pay for things like software, diagnostic equipment and structural test equipment.

"It is extremely important to the college and everyone in it," Hightower said.

said Vladimir Prishchev, a pensioner casting his ballot for Putin in Russia's Pacific port city of Vladivostok, where graft is rampant and life miserable for most people. "When Putin takes charge of something, he takes it to the end."

Some Russians, particularly liberals, fear Putin might trample Russia's fragile democracy and restore the iron control the secret police enforced during the Soviet era.

But some Russian reformers and Western officials and businessmen have praised Putin as a pragmatic reformer who will restore stability in Russia and improve people's lives by making reforms work.

With a trademark poker face, Putin comes across as stern and colorless, often cold. He is described often as resembling the archetypal "chekist" or secret policeman — which appeals to many Russians who believe tough government alone can clean up the country and restore stability.

Putin says he is a democrat, but he has been vague about his plans beyond stressing the need for strong government. Some analysts say Putin has few specific plans because of his rapid rise to power, and it might be months before his intentions are clear. Nor is Putin likely to turn things around quickly after decades of authoritarianism and economic disintegration, they add.

Yeltsin, who stunned Russians by resigning six months early and dubbing Putin as his political heir, said Sunday he was confident that the younger leader would continue the reforms set in place after the Soviet collapse.

"Everybody is waiting for change," Yeltsin said after casting his ballot. "There will be some changes, but the main thing is the course of reform must stay, and it will stay. I am convinced of that."

Putin, who rose through a series of mostly obscure government posts in the 1990s and has never held elected office, was appointed prime minister by Yeltsin in August. He gained immediate popularity for his vigorous image and his tough handling of the war in Chechnya. Putin was named acting president when Yeltsin resigned on Dec. 31.

Little is known about Putin, and extensive checks by journalists and others in recent months have produced more questions and few insights. Unlike many prominent officials, Putin has not been linked to large-scale corruption, boosting his image in the eyes of Russians who have seen political insiders amass vast fortunes while living standards for most people plummeted.

The election campaign was lackluster because a Putin victory seemed inevitable. The other candidates appeared resigned to not winning, and there was little in the way of campaign rallies and trips. State television lavished Putin with daily coverage, boosting his chances.

tial speakers," he said. "Most of the people in the news today are on the list. We also take suggestions from patrons, faculty and students, and then the president and I discuss it."

Nancy Kassebaum Baker, Alf Landon's daughter, often is sought for her input in potential Landon speakers, Reagan said.

The subject of Woodward's speech will remain unknown until the day of the lecture.

"Most of the speakers will write their speeches in the last few days to keep things fresh," he said.

Woodward will arrive Tuesday in Manhattan to speak with Landon Lecture series patrons and K-State journalism faculty, Seaton said.

Pope asks for pardon from Jewish holy site

By JOCELYN NOVECK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Pope John Paul II crowned his Holy Land sojourn Sunday with a stunning gesture to the Jews at their holiest site, shuffling slowly up to the Western Wall and placing a plea for forgiveness in a nook between its yellowed stones.

The gesture by the 79-year-old ailing pontiff was sure to become the most indelible image in a week of unforgettable moments.

It came on a whirlwind final day that saw the pope visit the sacred sites of all three faiths, all within the confines of Jerusalem's walled Old City, one of the most disputed patches of land in the world.

At the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, the pontiff knelt at the spot where tradition says Jesus was resurrected. At the Haram as-Sharif, the hilltop where Muslims say the prophet Mohammed ascended to heaven, he met with Jerusalem's top Islamic cleric.

At each stop, he couldn't help but witness the passionate dispute over a city that both Israelis and Palestinians claim as their capital. Many who glimpsed him witnessed something equally potent: the charisma and healing power of this aging, ailing pontiff.

"Some wonderful things are going to happen in this century," said Bishop William Murphy of Boston, who followed the week-long journey. "And I think that this week, we saw the beginning of it."

Hunched and leaning on a cane, the pontiff showed doubters he was more than up to the rigors of an ambitious and grueling itinerary.

Not only did he uphold his entire packed schedule, he managed to squeeze in an impromptu second look at the Church of the Holy Sepulcher before flying back to Rome on Sunday evening. He even hoisted himself up on the running board of his Chevy Suburban and waved, drawing cheers from delighted tourists.

For Israelis, the highlight of the day, and indeed the week, was when the pope navigated the 86 steps it took him to reach the Western Wall and placed a note in its stones, echoing a tradition of generations of Jewish worshipers. He had earlier in the week reached out to Jews at their Holocaust memorial, Yad Vashem. But this was a gesture at the holiest site of all Judaism.

The pope's words were from an address he made earlier this month in Rome, expressing sorrow over the past errors of his church.

"God of our fathers, you chose Abraham and his descendants to bring your Name to the Nations," read the typewritten message. "We are deeply saddened by the behavior of those who in the course of history have caused these children of yours to suffer and, asking your forgiveness, we wish to commit ourselves to genuine brotherhood with the people of the Covenant."

After a private prayer, the pope made a sign of the cross, then momentarily placed a trembling hand on the rocks.

The Israeli official in charge of the visit, Moshe Fogel, said he was only informed 10 minutes ahead of time that the pope was planning to place a note in the wall.

"I only imagined a tiny note," he said. "I looked, and this was a real document, unmistakably spread out for all the world to see."

Fearing it would blow away, Fogel recovered the note after the pope's departure and transferred it to Yad Vashem, "where it will remain on display for the world to see, forever."

Castro announces imminent return of 6-year-old Gonzalez to native Cuba

By ANITA SNOW
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAVANA — President Fidel Castro declared Sunday that the Miami relatives of 6-year-old Elian Gonzalez had lost their battle to keep the child in the United States and that it was only a matter of time before the boy was reunited with his father in Cuba.

"The Cuban mafia has lost," an animated Castro said before hundreds of pro-government university students gathered to press for the child's return to his communist homeland.

U.S. District Judge K. Michael Moore's dismissal on Tuesday of the family's lawsuit seeking to block Elian's repatriation was just and moral, Castro said.

In rejecting the request for a political asylum hearing for the child, Moore meticulously reasoned and handed down an unobjectionable sentence from a judicial point of view, the Cuban leader said. "From a legal point of view, it is invulnerable."

Castro said the boy should be back in Cuba within three weeks, depending upon what other legal or political maneuvers the Miami relatives attempt.

"Justice will win and so will the Cuban people," student Norge Jimenez declared at the rally, which occurred during a congress of the pro-government Federation of University Students, known as the FEU. "Elian will become a member of the FEU!" he said.

The U.S. Justice Department late Friday told Elian's relatives in Miami that they have until noon today to agree to a speedy appeal or the boy will be returned rapidly to his father in Cuba, according to family spokesman Armando Gutierrez.

In Washington, D.C., a federal official close to the case confirmed that the Justice Department plans to give the family's lawyers until April 3 to file the appeal.

Elian has been at the center of an international tug-of-war since late November, when he was rescued by fishermen who found him lashed to an inner tube bobbing off the Florida coast. Elian's mother and 10 others perished when their boat sank during the journey from Cuba to the United States.

In Miami, Elian was turned over to his great-uncle, who is now fighting for the right to raise him, saying he can give him a better life off the communist island. His father and four grandparents, backed by Castro, have demanded the child's return to his native country.

For four months, the Miami relatives have successfully blocked the child's repatriation. In an apparent bid to increase American support for their battle to keep Elian in the United States, the Miami relatives last week allowed television journalist Diane Sawyer to spend two days with the boy.

The ABC News program "Good Morning America" plans to air the first of several reports Monday.

A Spanish-speaking child psychiatrist, with no prior connection to the case, accompanied Sawyer on the visit, the television network said.

Additional portions of Sawyer's report likely will be aired on Tuesday, and on "20/20" Wednesday, the network said.

Kansas ranks among lowest in seat-belt usage

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANHATTAN — Kansas motorists are buckling up more than they used to, but the state still has one of the lowest rates of seat belt use, according to a national survey.

Kansas is in the so-called "Beltless Belt," a nine-state region with some of the lowest rates of buckled-up motorists in the United States. The distinction is based on 1998 state-by-state surveys compiled by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Among states in the belt, the percentage of seat-belt-compliant drivers and passengers ranges from 52 percent in Alabama up to 58.7 percent in Kansas. The other Beltless Belt states are Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi, Florida, Kentucky and West Virginia.

At the other end of the scale,

California leads the nation with the highest rate of belted motorists, at 88.6 percent, followed by New Mexico and Oregon, both at 82.6 percent, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

"The fact of the matter is that seat belts save lives," said Kent Glasscock, majority leader in the Kansas House of Representatives.

Last month, Glasscock, R-Manhattan, was one of 17 House members to vote in favor of a bill that would have made failure to buckle up a primary traffic offense, carrying a $25 penalty instead of the current $10 fine.

But a K-State survey suggests that the state's compliance might be improving.

Last summer, the university used traffic counters to conduct a visual survey of Kansas motorists in 20 counties.

The survey found that the rate of belted drivers in Kansas had risen to 63 percent — up by more than 4 percent from the 1998 national data.

In 1996, Kansas ranked 44th among all states in seat belt use at 44 percent, tied with Mississippi and Alabama. Two years later, Kansas' improved 58.7 percent compliance enabled it to vault to 34th place.

The three states with the lowest seat belt rates in the country, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wyoming, are known as the Little Beltless Belt.

K-State will conduct another statewide seat belt survey at more than 500 highway locations in May and June. The survey has been commissioned by the Kansas Department of Transportation.

Julia is Erin Roberts Brockovich

Movie offers fresh take on David vs. Goliath theme, showcases Roberts in her finest role to date

By KELLY FURNAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even though "Erin Brockovich" is based on a true story, it's a story that Hollywood seems to have told a thousand times: Small law firm faces impossible struggle against giant corporation with unlimited resources that is taking advantage of people.

This time, an impoverished woman named Erin Brockovich (Julia Roberts) goes to work for a small-town lawyer (Albert Finney).

When she comes across an unusual real estate case involving a power company, she investigates further to find a number of people have health problems as a result of the power company's actions on the environment.

Erin has to fight not only against her legal opponents, but also against her unwilling boss and snotty co-workers.

If the David vs. Goliath theme sounds familiar, it should. Some examples of similar developments include "A Civil Action" and "The Rainmaker."

What makes "Erin Brockovich" better than any of them, however, is that it doesn't follow the same, tired formula. Instead of telling the story from the point of view of a good-natured, courageous lawyer (whom no one believes anyway), this movie focuses on a good-natured, courageous clerk.

Most impressively, the movie shies away from the nonsensical dramatic court scene that is nothing like actual trials, and instead focuses on the results of the trial (or, in this case, arbitration) as a closing.

Plus, this movie is the best performance of Roberts' career. No one really believed her to be a prostitute in "Pretty Woman," and her character jumped across the spectrum too much in "My Best Friend's Wedding." That's not to say she wasn't charismatic in both roles — they were her best movies to date — but neither hold a light to her work in "Erin Brockovich."

British actor Finney deserves all sorts of acclaim for his performance as the small-town lawyer. Aside from conquering an uncanny accent and speech pattern, Finney's character honestly seems bewildered by Erin throughout the movie.

This movie triumphs from a truly compelling story, although it's odd to give Brockovich (who actually appears early in the movie as a waitress) credit just for providing interesting plot twists in her life. Her story is much more intriguing not because of what she accomplished, but the controversial sacrifices she made to create her accomplishments. For example, she constantly neglects her children and boyfriend in order to work on the case.

Although many movies about court cases rely on perfect protagonists and traditional story-telling methods, "Erin Brockovich" seems to be successful because it offers something fresh.

the making of the movie," she said. "It got the word out about the environmental concerns, and that is something she is really concerned with."

Brockovich is married again and is still working at the Southern California firm, where Frank Pattee said she is working on a number of other environmental cases.

"They have about seven other cases they are currently working on," Frank Pattee said.

Real Brockovich attended K-State in 1978

By REED DUNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Erin Brockovich was never Miss Wichita, but she was a Delta Upsilon fraternity little sister at K-State.

B.J. Pattee, Brockovich's mother and Lawrence resident, said the true-life movie was an accurate account of her daughter's life, with the exception of being Miss Wichita.

"She was not Miss Wichita," Pattee said. "She was in a beauty pageant down in Orange County, but she was never Miss Wichita."

After graduating from Lawrence High School in 1978, Erin L.E. Pattee came to K-State for one semester. B.J. Pattee said her daughter probably came to Manhattan just to get away from home.

"Like a lot of kids, she wanted to get out of her hometown," B.J. Pattee said. "Some of her friends were going there, too."

Brockovich's father, Frank Pattee, said even though Brockovich was interested in fashion, he is not sure she had a declared major during her semester at K-State.

"I think definitely she just wanted to get away from home," Frank Pattee said. "She keeps saying she majored in partying."

B.J. Pattee said after Brockovich left K-State, she went on to get a degree in fashion merchandising. She later moved to California and got her first job at K-Mart.

"She went to Dallas, Texas, and went to a school of fashion merchandising," B.J. Pattee said. "That's always been an interest of hers."

The idea for the film came after Brockovich's chiropractor introduced her to another client who thought the story would make an interesting movie, Frank Pattee said.

"She was going to a chiropractor in Santa Monica," he said. "They got together and talked about it, and decided to proceed with a movie."

With two ex-husbands and three children, Brockovich talked her way into a job at a Southern California law firm headed by attorney Ed Masry.

She uncovered a case in which chemicals from the Pacific Gas and Electric company had allegedly gotten into the water supply near Hinckley, Calif., and caused serious health problems for more than 600 residents.

She gathered information and evidence to help the firm win $333 million for the clients.

In the movie, the real Brockovich is cast as a burger-joint waitress with three speaking lines.

Julia Roberts plays Brockovich, and Frank Pattee said he thinks Roberts did a good job playing the role of his daughter.

"I've seen the movie two times," Frank Pattee said. "I think she did a very good job. A great job."

B.J. Pattee said she thinks her daughter is pleased with the attention people are giving the movie.

Ice Cube's latest album offers dance-club beats, various collaborations

By JUSTIN HAYWORTH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After 15 years and eight solo albums, the forefather of gangsta rap, Ice Cube, has released arguably his best album yet. "War & Peace Vol. 2: The Peace Disc" is the second part to his late 1998 release "War & Peace Vol. 1: The War Disc."

The two compact discs combine to follow the form of his Platinum 1992 release "Death Certificate," which contains life and death sides. The death side is dark and violent, talking about the social injustices in the world; the life side is lighter, and talks about the more positive things the world has to offer.

"War & Peace Vol. 1: The War Disc" contained the darker lyrics and social commentaries Ice Cube fans have grown to expect. Whereas "War & Peace Vol. 2: The Peace Disc" delivers a lighter, more dance-club-friendly atmosphere. Don't worry — just because it's more dance-friendly, it's still the same hard-hitting Ice Cube you know and love.

Track one, "Hello," should add hype to the N.W.A. reunion album that is in the works, as Cube shares the microphone with former N.W.A. members Dr.

Dre and Mc Ren. It's hard to find any kind of "peace" in this song that is a wakeup call to the up-and-comers who don't acknowledge the fact that Ice Cube, Dr. Dre and Mc Ren "invented" the gangsta rap they pay the bills on.

Sticking with some of the old-school style of earlier albums, Ice Cube has included four short inserts, ranging from the humorous "Pimp Homeo" and "Mackin' & Driving," to the serious messages of "Mental Warfare" and "Dinner With The CEO." Despite the album's title, there are few tunes with the "positive" vibe alluded to in the title. The peaceful message is highlighted by Ice Cube's collaboration with Krayzie Bone on "Until We Get Rich."

Beside Krayzie Bone, Dr. Dre and Mc Ren, guest appearances are at a minimum on this album. Chris Rock appears on the comedic track "You Ain't Gotta Lie To Kick It" and Mack 10 and Jayo Felony round out the rest of the notable artists appearing.

Don't be surprised when this album breaks into the Billboard R&B and Pop charts in the top five after just the first week. This album delivers a little bit of Ice Cube for everyone. If you liked his older stuff or his more recent stuff, there is something for you on this album.

Israel-Syria peace talks stalled

By TERENCE HUNT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — President Clinton and Syrian President Hafez Assad failed during three hours of face-to-face negotiations Sunday to nail down an agreement to restart negotiations between Israel and Syria for a landmark peace treaty.

"The differences are significant and important, and obviously more work needs to be done to bridge them," White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said.

He characterized the meeting between Clinton and Assad — their first face-to-face summit in six years — as useful. But at the same time, he said, "We don't believe it would be productive" for Syrian-Israeli talks to resume at this point.

"It is impossible to predict when those talks might resume," he said.

Lockhart said Assad "articulated his position clearly and forcefully" throughout two businesslike sessions. Clinton spoke to Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak both before and after the Assad meeting, Lockhart said.

Syrian presidential spokesman Jubran Kourieh said that during the talks Assad stressed the importance of Syria's long demand for an Israeli pullback to the country's 1967 borders.

"Since yesterday, nothing earth-shattering happened in the peace process," Kourieh said afterward.

The summit discussed pending issues and the peace process and the "obstacles that Israel has put up and is still putting up," Kourieh said.

In Jerusalem, Deputy Defense Minister Ephraim Sneh said in a telephone interview that the main sticking point in Geneva was Syria's demand for a prior commitment to cede the strategic Golan Heights plateau.

"The fact that Syria insists upon dictating an agreement and not obtaining an agreed-upon agreement is what made the resumption of the talks impossible," Sneh said. "They are quite intransigent about what they are supposed to give in terms of security arrangements, and they have different ideas about normalization."

Clinton left Geneva shortly after the meeting broke up, leaving Lockhart behind to speak to reporters.

The spokesman said the United States will continue to mediate between Israel and Syria and that both sides are committed to reaching peace.

"In our judgment it is not worthwhile to have meetings just to have meetings," Lockhart said.

Expectations had been high going into the negotiations, in part simply because the 69-year-old Assad, who rarely travels, made a special trip to Switzerland to see Clinton.

As the day wore into evening, hopes diminished that the talks at a luxury hotel overlooking Lake Geneva would produce an agreement.

Officials said it was unlikely that any kind of formula could be announced for another round of talks, at least until Clinton had had a chance to talk to Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

Mubarak, a key figure in all peace negotiations in the region, had a scheduled meeting with Clinton in Washington D. C. on Tuesday.

Meanwhile, Clinton's Mideast envoy, Dennis Ross, was headed back to Israel to brief Barak on the talks.

Clinton mediated Israeli-Syrian talks in Shepherdstown, W.Va., which broke off in January. The president has been working intensely for their resumption. Time is running out on Clinton's presidency and his hopes to polish his legacy with a historic Mideast deal.

The outlines of an agreement already are well known — a return of the Golan Heights to Syria in exchange for security guarantees for Israel and normalization of relations. Peace in Lebanon would follow any agreement with Syria, which controls its neighbor's military, politics and economy.

The two sides still have to agree on how far Israel withdraws from the Golan, security arrangements, water rights from territory Israel surrenders and normalization of relations.

Barak has made a peace deal with Syria a top priority of his administration. But Israelis want concrete assurances of what they would get in return. Israel captured the Golan in the 1967 Mideast War, defended the territory in a bloody war in 1973 and annexed it in 1981.

Protesters stage peaceful demonstration at biotechnology-industry conference

By STEVE LEBLANC
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Opponents of biotechnology — some dressed in colorful costumes and chanting "Our genes are not for sale" — staged a peaceful demonstration Sunday on the first day of the industry's biggest conference in this country.

More than 1,000 protesters gathered at historic Copley Square, then marched under police escort to the site of the BIO 2000 conference at the Hynes Convention Center.

Police had prepared for weeks in advance of the protest and conference, fearing a repeat of riots that ripped through Seattle last December during a World Trade Organization rally.

No arrests were reported.

"We're trying to send a message to the biotechnology industry ... that their agenda in the U.S. is not good for the people. It's driven by profits," said Shawn Kay, 28, of Worcester, who dressed as an 8-foot, genetically engineered "killer tomato."

Some 8,000 scientists, researchers and chief executive officers were expected for the five-day conference that began Sunday.

Demonstrators who took part in the "Biodeviation" protest challenged biotech industry leaders to a debate, arguing that genetically engineered foods and medicines have not been proven to be safe and should be removed from supermarket shelves.

"The American public has been systematically deceived by the FDA (Food and Drug Administration) and the biotech industry," said Steven Druker, executive director of the Alliance for BioIntegrity.

Industry officials disagree, saying genetically engineered foods, from tomatoes to soybeans, have been studied and approved by federal regulators.

More than 1,000 protesters gathered at historic Copley Square, then marched under police escort to the site of the BIO 2000 conference at the Hynes Convention Center.

"There are studies on biotech foods that date back to 1973," said Gene Grabowski, a spokesman for the Grocery Manufacturers of America.

"Biotech foods are the only foods that have been studied to any extent for safety," he said.

Protesters ignore the industry's successes, said Carl B. Feldbaum, president of the Biotechnology Industry Organization, sponsor of the conference. He rejected the call for a debate.

In 1999 alone, Feldbaum said, the FDA approved 22 new biotech drugs to battle ovarian cancer, influenza, arthritis and other ailments.

The attention given the protesters has had a benefit for the industry, according to Feldbaum.

"All this publicity and excitement about biotechnology has seemed to raise attendance," he said. "Seven thousand would have been a record, and it looks like we're going to break 8,000."

Conference attendees took the protests in stride.

C.S. Prakash, a plant biotechnology researcher and professor at Tuskegee University in Alabama, said biotech opponents have a vested interest in latching onto new controversies.

"They need to promote new evils, new fears, because that's what brings in their money. They peddle fear."

"Today it's biotechnology. Three years ago it was global warming. Five years before that it was nuclear power," Prakash said.

Commission to discuss smoking ban

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan City Commission will discuss the future of the controversial smoking proposal at its weekly meeting at 5 tonight.

The commission is having the work session in response to the Riley County Board of Health and the K-State Student Senate's approval of an ordinance limiting smoking in restaurants and bars.

K-State Student Body President Jason Heinrich introduced the proposal to the Senate on Feb. 3. The Senate passed the proposal a week later.

The Riley County Board of Health followed the students' lead and passed a smoking proposal with a 10-1 vote Feb. 25.

"The Board of Health was the main impetus," Commissioner Karen McCulloh said. "Obviously, we have to discuss and look into anything they give us. But we have to give it some time and thought."

McCulloh said the commission hasn't drawn up a proposal yet, and it won't be debating the smoking issue tonight.

The session's purpose is to gather public feedback on the issue.

"Nothing will happen," McCulloh said. "It's just kind of a fact finding evening for us to gain public input. It's a chance to hear everybody and decide what step to take next. We haven't established clearly what dimensions a proposal would have."

Commissioner Roger Reitz said the commission won't be making a final decision tonight.

"After we hear input, we will tell the administration to either put a proposal together or not to put one together. I have no idea which way the commission will go, though," he said.

Reitz said he expects a large number of people on both sides of the issue to contribute to the session.

"I think there will be a lot of people there in opposition to this," he said. "There are mixed feelings. It will be a very strongly debated topic. There will be people there that will have quite a bit of input. I would be surprised if there wasn't."

Heinrich said that he, along with Vice President Gabe Eckert and President-elect Jake Worcester, will present the Senate's original proposal at the commission meeting.

"I'm really happy that the proposal has made it this far," he said. "It was definitely a team effort. It has gained a lot of public support."

McCulloh said the commission already has begun to research the issue and has looked at other communities that have instituted smoking statutes, including Boulder, Colo., and Lenexa, Kan.

"We won't try to invent the wheel, but we will find something that works for Manhattan," she said.

R.J. Reynolds' gift to K-State sparks debate

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State-run Mid-American Commercialization Corp. recently received a $10 million gift of patents and machinery from R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

The machinery tests clean-air products by monitoring levels of combustion gases, organic compounds and air pollutants.

Tobacco industry opponents are suspicious of the timing of the gift because K-State Student Senate recently passed a resolution supporting a citywide ordinance limiting smoking in restaurants and bars and the Manhattan City Commission will discuss the proposal tonight.

Judy Keller, president of the Tobacco Free Kansas Coalition and executive director of the American Lung Association of Kansas, said she questions the industry's motives.

"I have real questions about the purpose and intent of the industry, an industry whose profits derive from a major health threat," she said.

Keller said tobacco industries have a proven history of deception.

"Tobacco industries try to buy good will all the time," she said. "It uses philanthropy to try and make people think that it's a good corporate citizen, but remember, its product kills."

"Why would you trust an industry built to intentionally harm people?"

Mary Jayne Hellebust, executive director for Kansas SmokeLess Kids Initiative, said her concern with gifts such as the one donated to MACC is that the tobacco companies are trying to blend themselves in with regular companies when they're actually developing and selling a product that kills people.

"They're literally disguising the fact that this product is designed to addict people and kill many of them," she said.

Hellebust said even though R.J. Reynolds is claiming there are no strings attached to the gift, she disagrees.

"These kinds of gifts often come with chains attached," she said.

Hellebust said there always is the possibility of more gifts like this coming in the form of research projects or research funding.

Abductions spawn manhunt

■ 4 Junction City residents taken; woman raped by 2 Mississippi men

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The search for two men believed to have kidnapped and raped a 19-year-old Junction City woman Friday is under way.

Geary County Sheriff Bill Deppish said officials have street names for both suspects but can't issue warrants for their arrest until their legal names are confirmed. He said they believe the suspects have fled Kansas and are in Mississippi, where one of the suspects is from.

Authorities said an 18-year-old man was at a Junction City car wash Friday when he was approached by the two suspects. The pair struck up a conversation with him and later followed him to the house of his 19-year-old girlfriend.

In the driveway, the suspects assaulted him with a gun, leaving a gash on his head. They forced him into the house where his girlfriend, her 3-year-old son and her 21-year-old brother were located.

All four of the victims were then forced into a car and taken to a local ATM, where the suspects forced the woman to give them her pin number and then withdrew $300 from her account.

Deppish said the group proceeded toward Milford Lake near Kansas Highway 244, where the two males were forced out of the car and told the woman and child would be killed if they reported the incident.

The men went to a nearby house and contacted the police with a vehicle description. Police later pulled over a car matching the description, and in it was the woman and her child, who were driving toward the area where the brother and boyfriend were forced from the car.

"It was evident by her condition that she had been raped by both suspects and in the presence of the child," Deppish said.

Authorities said the woman is also from Mississippi but that no connections have been made, and there is a possibility other people might be involved.

The two suspects are being sought on suspicion of four counts of aggravated kidnapping, two counts of aggravated rape, aggravated robbery, aggravated battery and carjacking.

Plans under way for university open house

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Watching racing cockroaches on a Saturday might seem like a boring way to spend a weekend, but it is only one of the dozens of activities available at the annual All-University Open House this year.

Jenny Ziegler, student coordinator for the open house committee and senior in architectural engineering, said the event gives both prospective and current students an opportunity to see what each individual college and department does and allows them to make choices about their future college career.

Open house will be from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday.

"This is our chance to show off K-State and what we do here," Ziegler said. "Each department within the nine colleges gets to show current and prospective students as well as alumni and the community all the great things about this university."

Ziegler said along with each college and department, there will be a variety of entertainment visitors to the campus will be able to see. She said a variety show with campus and high school performance groups will be between Denison and Holtz Halls and local mascots will be located throughout campus during the day.

Ben Hemmen, public relations chairman for the open house committee and junior in political science, said almost every college and department on campus will be having displays, information booths and hands-on activities in the K-State Student Union.

"The most important thing about open house is that during the other K-State recruitment days it is just seniors or juniors in high school coming to visit," Hemmen said. "During open house, we invite high school students, alumni, the community and students normally here during the year to see what other students and departments are doing."

Hemmen said allowing high school students to experience what college life is like during the school year, rather than with orientation leaders on senior days and freshmen orientation, gives them a more accurate picture.

"This is not a senior day and gives potential students an opportunity to see the campus alive," Hemmen said. "There will be students on campus preparing for finals, working on projects and gearing up for spring football practice. It is an opportunity for them to see the campus alive and full of activity."

Sumo-wrestling robots from the College of Engineering, a display of this year's solar car, crime-fighting and service dogs from the College of Veterinary Medicine, and PowerCat Crunch cereal samples at Shellenberger Hall will be some of the attractions.

Ziegler said a new attraction this year is a walk-through heart sponsored by the College of Veterinary Medicine. She said carriage rides from the Union to the College of Veterinary Medicine also will be available for $1.

"This gives everyone on campus the opportunity to see what other people are doing in different departments outside their own major," Ziegler said. "For the open-option students, they can see what their choices are and get descriptions on what they can do during college."

Hemmen said one of the problems the committee has had to work with this year is the construction in the Union because of the recent renovation project. He said because of the lack of space in some areas, accommodations have had to be made to work with the displays and large amount of people traveling into the Union during the event.

"The Union has never looked better, but at the same time, is at its worst because of the work being done in there," Hemmen said. "We have had to make special arrangements for people because of the construction that we haven't had to worry about in the past."

Hemmen said one of the things people tend to overlook about open house is that it is only for prospective students. He said, however, current students who might not have a major also could take advantage of the information presented at open house.

"I want to encourage everyone on campus to come through and see what they like or what they would change next year," Hemmen said. "Students who have not chosen a major can come see the services offered and take advantage of it."

Salina open house showcases campus

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Technology will be taking flight during the All-University Open House at K-State-Salina.

Tom Karcz, open house committee chairman and sophomore in airway sciences/professional pilot, said most of the organization and planning for open house has been turned over to the students. He said the event is important because it not only gives potential students an opportunity to see what the campus has to offer but the community as well.

"Open house is important because people get to come to campus and see what we are all about," Karcz said. "All of the activities are student-run, and it shows the students are involved in our campus."

The theme for this year's open house is "Purple. People. Power." Karcz said the event has been divided into specific areas including aviation, technology and electronics. He said there will be a status display of aircraft in the aviation department and professors will be giving presentations and demonstrations on the principles of flight.

Zach King, aviation projects committee member and senior in airway sciences, said the K-State-Salina flight team will be sponsoring a fly-in aircraft wash for those pilots who fly their planes in for the event. He said the aviation department also will be sponsoring a fly-in breakfast for these pilots. The breakfast will be from 7 to 9 a.m. and is open to the pilots as well as those who are visiting the campus for open house.

King said the activities and festivities associated with the event give a good opportunity to educate prospective students as well as the public about the campus and activities students are involved with.

"This event is a good opportunity to let people know we are here," King said. "There are so many people even in the Salina community that don't know

Petroleum plant explosion critically injures 12 people

PASADENA, Texas — An explosion Monday rocked a Phillips Petroleum chemical plant near the Houston Ship Channel, injuring at least 19 people and sparking a fire that sent thick smoke over the area.

"I was in the main shop area when I heard a loud explosion," said Tim Williams, a plant worker who estimated he was more than 200 yards from the explosion. "My ears hurt and I took off running. I looked back and saw flames and kept going."

Of the injured, at least 12 were hospitalized in critical condition. Some were burned severely, Mayor Johnny Isbell said.

An hour after the 1:25 p.m. blast, everyone had not been accounted for, said plant spokesman Norm Berkley.

Workers in neighboring plants and area residents were urged to remain indoors while officials tried to determine what was burning. Children in area schools were kept inside after the bell rang.

Smoke continued to rise two hours after the blast, but the density was diminishing rapidly. Smoke clearly was visible across Houston.

The Phillips complex was the site of a 1989 series of explosions and fires in a polyethylene reactor that killed 23 and injured 130.

Last June, two people were killed and four were injured in an explosion at the complex. Afterward, federal officials fined Phillips $204,000 for 13 alleged safety violations.

Tobacco companies to pay punitive damages to couple

SAN FRANCISCO — A jury ordered the nation's two largest tobacco companies Monday to pay $20 million in punitive damages to a dying ex-smoker who took up the habit after the surgeon general's warning began appearing on cigarette packs in the 1960s.

The Superior Court jury voted 9-3 to order Philip Morris and R.J. Reynolds to pay $10 million each to Leslie Whiteley and her husband.

The same jury awarded the couple $1.7 million in compensatory damages last week after finding that the companies deceived the public about the dangers of smoking.

That verdict was the first for a smoker who took up the habit after 1969, when tobacco companies, on the government's orders, began putting warnings about smoking's health risks on cigarette packs.

Around the country, juries have awarded damages to individual smokers only five other times.

Whiteley, 40, said she started smoking in 1972 at age 13. She smoked Philip Morris' Marlboros and Reynolds' Camels until 1998, when she quit shortly before doctors diagnosed small-cell lung cancer. Doctors said she probably will die this year.

The Whiteleys had asked for $115 million in punitive damages, which they said would represent 1 percent of the companies' combined net worth. Their lawyer said cigarette makers remain unrepentant for the harm they cause.

Philip Morris lawyer William Ohlemeyer contended that punitive damages are improper because the companies have made profound changes in the way they do business. He and other company lawyers have pointed to the $206 billion settlement reached in 1998 by cigarette makers and 46 states suing over health costs.

He said the companies will appeal if the judge upholds the verdict.

The tobacco companies argued that Whiteley harmed herself by her admitted use of marijuana, by smoking during pregnancy and by disregarding warnings on cigarette packages.

"Mrs. Whiteley never smoked a pack of cigarettes that didn't have a health warning on it that was written by the surgeon general," Ohlemeyer said.

But after reviewing internal industry documents, jurors found that the companies designed cigarettes negligently, then made false or misleading statements to the public and concealed information about the dangers of smoking.

In the other smoking verdicts around the country, two cases in Florida and one in New Jersey were overturned on appeal; an $80 million verdict in Portland, Ore., was reduced to $31 million by the judge; and a $51 million verdict against Philip Morris in San Francisco a year ago was cut in half by Superior Court Judge John Munter, who also is presiding over Whiteley's case.

TAKE note

Supreme Court. A Manhattan couple is one step closer to resolving their bankruptcy case over student loans after the U.S. Supreme Court refused an appeal on behalf of K-State.

Kansas officials had argued that state-run colleges and universities were immune from having debts owed to them wiped out because the 11th Amendment to the Constitution shields them from being sued in federal court.

On Monday, the justices rejected the appeal without comment, letting stand a 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling in the case of Mark and Genevieve Innes of Manhattan.

An attorney for the couple said the ruling means the case involving more than $50,000 in loans goes forward at a trial set for April 6.

"All that is left is for the courts to determine if they qualify for a hardship discharge" of their debts, said Brenda Bell, a Manhattan attorney representing the Inneses.

The couple filed for bankruptcy in 1996 in Topeka and sought to have the student loans forgiven as undue hardship.

As part of bankruptcy law and the federal loan program, Bell said, the couple had to file a separate suit against the state to get the loan wiped out.

As a condition of participation, universities are required to oppose any borrower's request for loan discharge.

The bankruptcy judge, a federal trial judge and the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals all ruled that the university, an agent of the state government, had waived its immunity by signing an agreement with the federal Department of Education to participate in the Perkins Loan program.

Bell said the bigger issue was that the Supreme Court ruling means that bankruptcy cases remain in federal court where they are filed. Plaintiffs will not have to settle claims with the state in state court, which could issue a judgment inconsistent with the federal level.

Kansas' appeal to the Supreme Court was supported by a friend-of-the-court brief filed on behalf of 24 states.

In the appeal, lawyers for Kansas argued that the state-run school had not waived its immunity simply by agreeing to follow federal regulations. "The 11th Amendment can only be waived by express waiver ... not by mere contractual agreements to follow federal regulations," they said.

Tiffany Ball, a spokeswoman for the Kansas attorney general's office, said the office was weighing its options and looking for other legal alternatives to avoid next week's trial.

"Obviously, we're disappointed," Ball said Monday afternoon. "We're just taking a look at what our next step is."

Robert Meeropol, the younger son of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg, speaks against the death penalty Monday night in Forum Hall. The Rosenbergs were executed in 1953 for allegedly conspiring to steal the secret of the atomic bomb and giving it to the Soviet Union.

Rosenbergs' son speaks out against death penalty in Forum Hall lecture

By BRYAN SCRIBNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Those who lead social movements tend to face execution by the government, said Robert Meeropol, son of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg.

The Rosenbergs were convicted in 1951 of providing nuclear weapon information to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics during World War II.

"It's the movement itself that becomes the focus of attack," said Meeropol, who is the executive director of the Rosenberg Fund for Children.

Meeropol presented his speech, "The Death Penalty: The Rosenbergs and Mumia Abu-Jamal," Monday night in the Forum Hall. The speech connected Abu-Jamal's current death-penalty sentence and the Rosenberg's execution in 1953.

"I was hoping he would talk more about Julius and Ethel Rosenberg," said Courtney Briscoe, junior in management information systems. "He's just pointing out that the injustice in the 1950s exists today."

At the beginning of the 21st century, Meeropol said the United States is going to see a repeat of the 1950s. He said this similarity can be seen in the case of Abu-Jamal.

Although protests and legal efforts are taking place, Abu-Jamal, a former Philadelphia journalist, faces execution for murder. Meeropol said Abu-Jamal attacked police brutality and racial prejudice as a broadcast journalist.

"He is the first to face execution like my parents," Meeropol said. "I see it as my parents case happening all over again. The forces of oppression have targeted him."

Meeropol said a Abu-Jamal was targeted with a racially biased and unfair trial when convicted of killing Philadelphia police Officer Daniel Faulkner in 1982. He said the news media portrays those who are fighting to save his life as ignorant.

As his parent's movement grew,

Meeropol said its success led to its attack. He said the effort to view these movements as narrow will only increase the chances of Abu-Jamal's execution.

Some people believe Abu-Jamal was convicted because he is black, Meeropol said.

"I am anti-capital punishment on moral grounds. Capital punishment requires perfection. We are incapable of coming up with a perfect system."

— Robert Meeropol, son of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg

"There are so many views — not all agree that he's innocent, but they do believe he needs a fair trial," Meeropol said.

Meeropol connected his family's hardships that resulted from his parents' deaths with those that could potentially face Abu-Jamal's family.

"It's important to work to save the life of Mumia and other people on death row so these families won't be torn apart like mine," he said.

There's a growing movement in the United States to end capital punishment, Meeropol said.

"I am anti-capital punishment on moral grounds," he said. "Capital punishment requires perfection. We are incapable of coming up with a perfect system.

"It's inevitable that an innocent person will be executed. If you support capital punishment you are supporting the execution of innocent people."

On college campuses, Meeropol said people usually see capital punishment on an individual basis. He said it is an institution and is not about the execution of one single individual.

Briscoe said there are a lot of problems in the United States judicial system, but she said she is neutral in her stance.

"I kind of believe in an eye-for-an-eye," she said.

Billy Williams, who graduated from K-State in December, said the speech focused on a subject that affects everyone. He said people must stand up for what they believe is right when given the opportunity.

Those who want to become involved in the anti-capital punishment movement are becoming part of a monumental struggle, Meeropol said.

"This is the kind of activity that sparks a lifetime commitment to activism," he said.

Bodies found in grave linked to Ugandan cult

By CRAIG NELSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RUGAZI, Uganda — Prison laborers dug layer-by-layer through rotting corpses Monday, pulling dozens of bodies from a mass grave at a sugarcane field — the third scene of carnage linked to a doomsday cult.

The laborers unearthed 73 bodies, including two dozen children and babies, from the field belonging to a defrocked Catholic priest who was one of the sect leaders. The grim discovery brings the number of cult-related deaths that police have confirmed to 562 since a March 17 fire in a makeshift church.

Some of the bodies recovered Monday bore stab wounds and others had pieces of cloth wrapped tightly around their throats. They appeared to have been dead at least a month, Dr. Ben Twetegire said.

The prisoners, shirtless and shoeless, stood head-high in the trench, sweating and digging under a glaring midday sun as they worked to unearth the bodies.

They covered their noses in gauze and passed cigarettes among themselves to try to ward off the enveloping stench, which drifted for hundreds of yards across lush hillsides overlooking a series of volcanic lakes. Onlookers and police plucked leaves from a cypress tree and thrust them into their nostrils to ease the stench.

As the twisted bodies were hoisted from the red-brown earth, villagers pressed against the crude wood fence at the edge of the cane field.

There were no screams of recognition. The bodies were apparently those of strangers — sect members who came for seminars on righteous living and the end of the world from former priest Dominic Katanbabo, a leader in the Movement for the Restoration of the Ten Commandments of God.

The bodies, some of them dismembered and one visibly pregnant, were examined for little more than a minute each by Twetegire, who dictated his horrific notes to Meda Magdalene, a 30-year-old health worker. Prisoners then picked up the bodies and flung them into a nearby trench for reburial.

Standing next to the doctor, Magdalene's list went on and on:

"Body No. 38, young male, largely decomposed."

"Body No. 39, young female, badly decomposed, external signs of violence."

Police inspector Chris Tindigarukayo said authorities didn't wait for forensics experts to examine the bodies before reburial because they feared the spread of disease.

The cursory examinations came as the Ugandan government announced it had created a team of investigators, supposedly to examine the bodies found in Rugazi and re-examine corpses found elsewhere.

The team, which includes chemists, a pathologist and forensic experts, would be heading into the interior in the next day or so, police spokesman Eric Naigambi said by telephone from Kampala, Uganda's capital.

After Rugazi, the team was to go to the village of Buhunga, where they will re-exhume 153 bodies of sect members found there last week in mass graves, quickly examined by a local doctor, and reburied.

Terenzi Kingera, a regional officer with Uganda's criminal investigation division, said the doctor had been overwhelmed by the job, so the corpses needed to be re-examined.

Kingera said the investigators' main goal would be figuring out "how could so many people be killed. Were they poisoned and with which kind of poison?"

The investigation has been plagued by logistical problems since it began. Police are ill-trained and desperately ill-funded, often without vehicles or fuel to power them.

Senior Ugandan officials, meanwhile, have quoted witnesses as saying the sect's two top leaders — Cledonia Mwerinde, 40, and Joseph Kibwetere, 68 — might have left Kanungu on March 17, the same day a church fire there killed 330 members. Six more bodies were later found in a pit latrine in Kanungu.

The fire deaths initially were viewed as a mass suicide. However, many have speculated that the two leaders fled because the world did not end Dec. 31 as they had predicted and sect members wanted belongings they surrendered on joining.

Authorities now are treating all the deaths as murders.

Jim Muhesi, a member of parliament and a onetime head of Uganda's internal security agency, theorized Saturday that sect leaders cracked down viciously on the defiant, poisoning some, and urging a mass suicide to curb further defections.

Police discovered the Rugazi grave Friday when they came to inspect the compound that had belonged to Katanbabo, who is believed to have died in the Kanungu fire.

Kanungu, Buhunga and Rugazi are all in the mountains of southwestern Uganda, near the border with Rwanda and Congo and no more than 50 miles apart.

The sect once had up to 1,000 members. Authorities fear most might have become victims.

Student government fails students with fee increase Student senators and President Jason Heinrich failed their constituents with their lack of professionalism in increasing privilege fees.

The problem is not in the $6 privilege-fee increase. The problem is the way the decision was reached.

Although Student Senate has had a semester and a half to make a decision concerning a possible privilege-fee increase to fund Lafene Health Center, no action was taken until 2 a.m. the Friday before spring break — days before a decision had to be sent to the Kansas Board of Regents. If no decision was reached, university administrators would make a $3 million decision that would affect all K-State students.

Because Lafene officials have displayed an extraordinary inability to manage funds competently, Senate was saddled with the responsibility of finding more money for the health center. It either had to increase privilege fees, impose a per-visit charge on Lafene patrons or some combination of the two.

Senate's Privilege Fee Committee members made no recommendation to Senate for many months. When they finally arrived at a decision, they presented a plan to increase privilege fees and impose a user fee.

However, shortly after the plan was brought up at Senate, the bill was amended to increase privilege fees only — the user fee was killed.

The amendment, however, was not to the liking of most committee members or Heinrich. When their proposal was not accepted verbatim, they decided to attempt to kill the bill. All members of the committee, except one, voted against the amended bill. Heinrich, meanwhile, vowed to veto the bill if it passed in its new form.

If Heinrich were to veto the bill, the decision probably would have been in the hands of university administration. Because Senate would not have an opportunity to reconvene before spring break, it would have had no chance to override a Heinrich veto. It's only other possible course of action would have been a last-minute meeting with whatever members remained to attempt to hash out a new bill.

Everyone involved in the decision acted unprofessionally.

Senators ignored the suggestion of a committee that had spent much time considering an increase. During the course of the months the committee deliberated, no other members of Senate attended a single meeting. For a decision of such magnitude — one that would elicit nearly seven hours of discussion — senators displayed staggering levels of apathy.

The committee showed poor foresight with its inability to bring forth a bill at an earlier time. With $3 million of student money on the line, some time should be left to possibly rethink the plan if Senate disagrees with their proposal. In addition, its move to block the amended bill — one that had a two-thirds majority in Senate — because it was not its original plan was childish.

Committee members preferred to let administration make a decision that would affect students rather than let students make the decision for themselves.

Finally, Heinrich showed poor leadership skills, a lack of dedication and sheer whininess.

His poor leadership was displayed through his appointment of committee members. Rather than recruit senators of varying opinions and viewpoints, Heinrich primarily appointed members who apparently -thought like him and would reach a decision to his liking.

He showed a lack of dedication by leaving the meeting — which dragged on for hours and became quite heated at times — hours before a final decision was reached.

And he proved whiny by flaunting his veto power openly at the meeting when it became obvious that his preferred bill would not be the one approved. To make matters worse, Heinrich failed to back up his actions with a veto. Instead, he simply refused to sign the bill, sending it to the regents without his support.

Heinrich's actions were anything but presidential.

Senators — Privilege Fee Committee members, specifically — were unprofessional in their actions, as well.

With only one week remaining for the lame-duck president and many outgoing senators, it is time they start taking their jobs seriously and acting in a manner befitting their positions.

From pageants to TV interviews, Ramseys prove to be made for Hollywood

Everyone who has turned on a television in the past three years, even if only in a vain search for the antique roadshow, has at one point caught some news program featuring a vamped-out JonBenet Ramsey.

Everyone who has checked out in a convenience or grocery store in the past three years, no matter the objective, has at one point caught a blown up picture of the child out of the corner of the eye.

Such is the news media. Now another bizarre chapter of this already confusing and revolting case has unfolded.

John and Patsy Ramsey recently began a book tour to promote "The Death of Innocence," in which they not only proclaim their lack of involvement in the murder but also accuse the governor of Colorado, Bill Owens, of disliking them personally and hindering investigations.

This book tour includes all types of media interviews in which the couple are offering to take a polygraph test that would not be admissible in court perjury but might help their reputation. The polygraph would be administered on live television for the nation to see, probably making the O. J. Simpson trial look as boring as watching Kathie Lee Gifford talk.

Whether the now infamous — but probably never-to happen — lie-detector test will become a reality is a mystery. But so is this entire investigation that has seemingly been handled irresponsibly.

The recent Barbara Walters interview gives more evidence the Ramseys are banking in the celebrity status as well as putting on the least convincing faces I have ever seen. Walters interviews people like Cher. She does Oscar pre-shows and frequents White House state dinners. She got Monica Lewinsky. Now she gives us a seemingly-apologetic questioning of the Ramseys, who still give rehearsed answers and pointed slams of Owens.

So, the drama continued with the governor rebuking his actions, as well as slamming Walters and accusing the Ramseys of giving the false hope of a lie detector test.

Now TV programs all over the United States once again are highlighting the murder case, showing the video that is as famous as Lewinsky's Gap dress, essentially catapulting the Ramseys into a higher celebrity.

I do not have a clue whether those parents killed their child. I do not have a clue whether this case will ever be solved. I do know Patsy Ramsey comes off as a joke when she is interviewed. She is supposedly the closest thing to a suspect, since her handwriting has been given a 99 percent chance of matching the ransom note left by JonBenet's body. She is also a former beauty queen, guilty of living her dreams through her daughter, who happened to not mind lipstick and mascara.

The entire situation with JonBenet's activities, supposed sexual abuse and heinous death is so twisted and bizarre that Americans will eat it up. But let us not succumb to the parents' wishes for the

it along with anyone else who can stay up past 10:30 p.m. What I will not do is believe a word coming out of the Ramseys' mouths.

All anyone has to do is look at the big picture of this drama and take into account that a child was killed by someone whose identity will probably never be known. All anyone has to do is look at the big picture of the newest addition to the story and see something is not right with the parental situation in this case.

Cynicism is not something I would like to say is one of my greatest attributes, but I see something wrong with the way the media has handled this murder.

Ratings are important. But so is figuring this case out.

The Ramseys are making con-artistry as real as "The Sopranos" make the mafia lifestyle and at the same time gaining the celebrity status of Hollywood actors.

The Ramseys will never portray themselves tastefully — that was obvious before JonBenet was found murdered.

Let the child rest and the parents mourn because it cannot be left unsaid that their child was murdered and, since innocence is before guilt according to law, these parents have every right to mourn the death of JonBenet.

"Entertainment Tonight," Walters and a tacky book tour simply are not the way in which to publicly point fingers and proclaim innocence.

KELLIE FARRELL/Collegian

Students should back athletes, not bring them down

Gripe, whine and complain. These seem to be the only things the K-State student body has been capable of doing lately.

If we're not complaining about the basketball team, we're complaining about Pepsi Cola, parking, squirrels or let us not forget everyone's favorite scapegoat — the greek system.

Look at us. We are pathetic.

Imagine what outsiders must think of our school when they pick up a copy of the Collegian and read the Campus Forum. The constant bickering that goes on there is embarrassing.

Seriously — I think high schoolers are more mature than us.

Let's face it — the basketball team has been hurting for several seasons now. I'm not sure if the problem was with the coaching staff, player talent or a general lack of team cohesion, but one thing is for sure: K-State basketball has seen better days.

Maybe the problem isn't the team at all. Maybe it is us.

Who wants to put 100 percent of themselves into something when the very people you represent are your biggest opponents? Forget the University of Kansas, K-State. The biggest rival is right here in Manhattan and is 20,000 strong.

I vowed not to support the basketball team until Tom Asbury was gone. It was a personal vendetta, I guess. My problem with Asbury wasn't his coaching style, or anything like that.

I lost all respect for Asbury when two of his players basically went undisciplined by him after they broke into my friend's house and tried to attack him for what he wrote in one of his weekly columns.

Sure, they had to sit out a few games at the beginning of the season, but somehow I doubt they were missed much against the community colleges we seem to play at the beginning of every season.

Some might think Manny Dies and Pero Vasiljevic were justified in kicking down Todd Stewart's door trying to get to him. After all, Todd wrote that "Manny Dies is the worst player in the history of college basketball."

It also seems ironic that I'm criticizing the negative comments toward our basketball team, when my reason for disliking Asbury stems from someone doing exactly that.

Maybe this whole column is one big contradiction. I admit I am biased because Todd is a good friend of mine. I found it amusing when someone called into the Forum and said I'm the "worst writer since Todd Stewart." Little did they know we were roommates last year, and I took it as a compliment.

I don't condone what Todd said. In fact, I disagree with his approach to the whole situation, but you have to admire someone who has the guts to write what he really thinks rather than trying to please everyone and riding the fence on every issue.

Yes, Todd's words were harsh, but I'd rather read a strong opinion I disagree with than fight my way through a column that says nothing. Regardless of what his opinion was, at least he put a name and a face to his statements.

It might be tempting to think the joke ended up being on Todd, but don't make that mistake. Almost exactly a year after breaking into Todd's house, Vasiljevic was arrested for possession of drug paraphernalia, and consequently lost his scholarship and was deported back to Australia. Dies played out the rest of his college career and managed to get arrested only a few times in the process.

Last but not least, Asbury resigned — but not before Todd could send him a graduation announcement as one last token of his appreciation and support.

Looks to me like Todd had the last laugh.

OK, enough of that soapbox.

Now that we have a new coach, there's nothing but positive talk and anticipation of a new chapter of K-State basketball, right?

Wrong.

Since Jim Wooldridge was hired, there has been a lot of pessimism and very little encouragement toward him. People have attacked his past collegiate coaching record, belittled his tenure with the Chicago Bulls and lashed out at athletic director Max Erick for hiring him.

All of this comes without Wooldridge even holding his first practice.

I don't care if Wooldridge loses every game next season. As long as he exhibits even an ounce of integrity and character, I will support K-State basketball again.

The jeers from the student body, sadly enough, don't stop with the basketball team.

K-State football is the pride of every Wildcat, right?

You would think that we as students would be proud of our football team for all they've accomplished and grateful for the national recognition it brings to our school.

If this is so, why is it that when one of our football players makes a mistake, the student section gets restless?

I distinctly remember the sick feeling I had standing in the ICAT section last fall after the students started booing Jonathan Beasley because he was sacked. Beasley was having a bad game, and the faithful fans on the east side of KSU

Stadium were yelling "Bring in Roberson!"

The young Eli Roberson III might be the quarterback he is hyped up to be, but guess what? Beasley will be back next season. Granted, Roberson will see playing time and might take over the starting role eventually, but Beasley will begin next season as our first-string quarterback.

The problem students had with Beasley last season is they were so used to Michael Bishop. Bishop was a play-maker, but at times he became rattled and made poor decisions. Beasley doesn't explode into opposing defenses like Bishop did, but he is more level-headed on the field and seems to have a mastery knowledge of Bill Snyder's play book and is an excellent signal caller.

The anonymous bashing of athletes and coaches in the Campus Forum is juvenile and counterproductive. If you have a problem with the way K-State sports are played, tell the athlete or coach what you think face-to-face. Better yet, if you think you have all of the answers, try out for the team.

Either way, don't be a coward and hide behind your phone because that accomplishes nothing and only makes K-State look bad.

Scott Roney would have been one of the great thinkers of his time — in the mid-1800s.

Whatever happened to Gary Coleman?

I would just like to apologize to the guy we shot in the butt with a paint-ball gun. We were really, really stoned.

How come you guys print everything so small that we can't even read it?

If David Levin's columns are too thought-out for you, maybe you should go back to high school.

Union construction continues with completion of party room

By JUSTIN SCHUSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Final touches are being added to a new birthday party room in the K-State Student Union, Terri Eddy, Union recreation manager, said.

"It's usable. We have some decorating to do," she said.

Located next to the billiard tables in the basement of the Union, the room, which formerly was next to the pro shop, had to be moved to make room for construction of a hair care center, Eddy said.

"We always had one. We just moved it," she said.

Eddy said the room can be used for more than just birthday parties. It has been used for league bowling meetings and even as a study room for students.

Student organizations who need a free place to meet also can use the room if it is available, Eddy said.

"It's just kind of an all-purpose little room," she said.

The construction, which began over the winter break, is not a part of the Union enhancement project, Eddy said. The money for the room came out of the Union operation budget.

The project conserved money by using the door and the windows from the previous Commerce Bank location and by having Union maintenance employees build the room.

"It was all done in-house," Eddy said.

Cindie Snyder, Union marketing and promotions manager, said the project was relatively inexpensive because construction was done internally.

People wishing to reserve the room for a bowling birthday party can choose from two packages offered by the recreation center. Reservations should be made three working days in advance for package No. 1 and two days for package No. 2.

"It's not just for little kids. College students could have a blast having a bowling birthday party," Snyder said.

Eddy said a Rock It Bowl package could be a possibility for a college birthday party.

"I'm sure we'll come up with a package over the summer and have it ready to go for the fall," Eddy said.

People interested in scheduling a bowling birthday party can contact Eddy at 532-6562.

Putin wins Russian presidential elections, says no quick solutions exist for country's economic, social problems

By ANGELA CHARLTON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Vladimir Putin, taking the helm of a weak, unwieldy Russia as its second democratically elected president, admitted to voters Monday that he has no swift solutions to the poverty and corruption that bedevil his nation.

Putin ordered the government to pay off wage debts to state workers and said a first order of business after his convincing victory in Sunday's election would be selecting a prime minister.

World leaders cautiously welcomed Putin's victory. President Clinton called Putin to congratulate him Monday and used the opportunity to reiterate U.S. dismay over the war in Chechnya. U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan predicted U.N.-Russian relations would strengthen under Putin.

Putin has promised to protect democratic freedoms but has yet to indicate how he would carry the sprawling nation into the post-Boris Yeltsin era. Putin, 47, was named acting president when Yeltsin resigned Dec. 31.

Putin visited Yeltsin at his country house outside Moscow on Monday.

"You have taken the correct course. You are doing your job, fulfilling your duties," Yeltsin told his successor after congratulating him in footage shown on Russian television.

Many Russians hope Putin will distance himself from Yeltsin, whose unpredictability and poor health — along with the allegations of corruption within his inner circle — contributed to his political demise.

"New people are likely to appear" when Putin names his government, Dmitry Kozak, the government chief of staff, said Monday.

After he is inaugurated in early May, Putin will appoint a prime minister, who then will form a government, the Interfax news agency cited Kozak as saying. As acting president, Putin retained the position of prime minister, which he has held since Yeltsin appointed him in August.

Putin's levelheaded, firm-handed approach impressed voters. Russians like his pledges to restore the country's military might, fight corruption and battle poverty and social injustice.

They also admire his uncompromising stance against rebels in Chechnya — although ending the war gracefully could prove a challenge.

At a news conference as election returns were coming in, Putin acknowledged the enormity of the task facing him and said he could promise no quick fixes.

"The level of expectations is very high. People are tired and struggling and they're hoping for things to get better, but miracles don't happen," he said.

Asbury bitter over job's end

Urlick responds to former coach

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Director of Intercollegiate Athletics Max Urlick responded Monday to remarks made by former K-State basketball head coach Tom Asbury at a final press conference with select members of the news media.

Urlick responded to the remarks Asbury made regarding K-State administrators using Urlick as their messenger. K-State President Jon Wefald was unavailable for comment on Monday, but Urlick said he is in charge.

"I make the decisions," Urlick said. "Every decision came from my recommendation."

Urlick said he did not want to get into a war of words with Asbury.

"I think that people in Tom Asbury's shoes often have a different perspective on things," Urlick said.

He also reiterated what he had said in a previously published Collegian article that the two had met earlier in the season to discuss the program.

In a March 10 Collegian article, Urlick said he met with Asbury prior to the season's start and designated some guidelines that were important to keeping his job. Urlick said one of the stipulations was that Asbury had to achieve at least an even record within the conference season.

"We jointly agreed what the objectives

MANHATTAN — Tom Asbury said he is bitter about the way K-State handled his firing.

Asbury, who quit March 10, discussed for the first time Monday in a press conference in his home the days surrounding his forced resignation.

He said he understands being fired, but he doesn't like the way it was done.

"I've heard horror stories about terminations, but this ranks right up there," Asbury said. "It was handled very poorly and in a very unprofessional manner."

Asbury's firing had been expected for at least two months as the Wildcats fell into a school-record 11-game losing streak and home attendance went into a nosedive. K-State was 9-19 in Asbury's last year, last in the Big 12.

Two days before he resigned, Asbury admitted he was in danger of being fired but insisted he would not quit.

But on March 10, a few hours after an 84-60 loss to Kansas in the Big 12 Tournament the school said Asbury had resigned effective immediately.

Athletics Director Max Urlick later said he had begun to realize in January that he might have to fire Asbury and hired a consultant to evaluate dozens of candidates. Asbury said Monday that he was never told about that and was led to believe a decision would not be made until after the season.

Within days of Asbury's resignation, the school hired Jim Wooldridge to replace him.

Asbury said Urlick had left him a message on his hotel voice mail in Kansas City, Mo., the morning of March 9 saying Urlick would give him a letter after the game against Kansas.

"Max walked into the bathroom area of the Kemper Arena dressing room (after the game) and stuck a piece of paper in my pocket and walked out. That's how he did it," Asbury said.

▶ Editor's note: The Kansas State Collegian was not invited to Tom Asbury's home press conference, and a Collegian reporter was denied access into the event Monday.

No. 34 Cats off to best Big 12 start

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State tennis team is off to its best conference start in team history and is ranked No. 34 in the country.

In the Cats' last contest, a 5-4 win at Colorado on Saturday, it finished off a two-game road streak and improved to 4-0 in conference play and 10-4 overall.

"We're very happy to be 2-0 on this trip," K-State head coach Steve Bietau said. "We had a very difficult couple of matches. We're very drained but very pleased right now."

The team was led by freshman No. 37 Petra Sedlmajerova's 6-3, 6-3 victory at No. 1 singles over Jessica Garrow. After splitting the six singles matches, K-State was under pressure to win two of the three doubles matches in order to win the meet. The Cats responded with the No. 2 doubles pairing of Anna Pampoulova and Alena Jecminkova and the No. 3 doubles Natalia Farmer and Kathy Chuda pulling out the needed victories.

"I thought we got a real big boost at the No. 3 spot," Bietau said. "We've struggled there lately, and today Natalia and Kathy helped the team with a win."

The first game of the road trip was Thursday at UNLV. In that contest, another 5-4 win for the Cats, they won the No. 2-4 singles matches but struggled in doubles play, Bietau said.

"We played erratic at best in doubles," Bietau said.

The Cats' biggest win during the spring break period was against No. 18 Baylor on March 18 when K-State handed the Bears their first season loss. Despite Sedlmajerova's first loss of the season, the team's singles play was still outstanding, Bietau said.

"The singles matches were some of the best tennis anybody could see," Bietau said. "Just to see how hard everyone played and the effort that was put out on the court was unbelievable."

In order to win the dual meet, K-State had to pull out some tough victories in doubles play, another impressive feat, Bietau said.

"Winning the close matches comes down to composure and guts," Bietau said. "This isn't the first time we've performed well in tight situations, but it is the first time we've done it against an opponent as difficult as Baylor."

Following the victory over Baylor, K-State jumped from No. 49 to No. 34 in the national rankings. The No. 34 ranking is K-State's highest ranking of the season. Individually, sophomore Jecminkova was selected as the Big 12 Women's Tennis Player of the Week after upsetting Baylor's No. 45 Katja Kovak.

Snyder rejects USC matchup

By RICHARD SMITH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For perhaps the first time in K-State football history, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics found itself on the giving — rather than receiving — end of a scheduling rejection last week.

According to some reports, the Wildcats only were a few penstrokes away from having a finalized agreement to play a home-and-home series with the University of Southern California before the proposal was nixed by head coach Bill Snyder.

The rejection of the plan left USC officials publicly flabbergasted, but associate athletic director Jim Epps, who oversees football scheduling for K-State, said that, despite reports to the contrary, the USC agreement never was a done deal.

"We had agreed to take it into consideration, nothing more," Epps said. "That is a very common element of scheduling. Prospective opponents are willing to take it into consideration. Sometimes that leads to doing a contract, and oftentimes, for a host of reasons, it never goes any further."

Snyder's veto now leaves K-State back at square one — searching for competent opponents to fill scheduling gaps over the 2001-03 seasons.

Epps said he was in contact with a number of schools in regards to filling those vacancies, but he declined to name specific schools. He also declined to reveal whether any of the potential opponents had finished in The Associated Press Top 25 last season.

The Cats now have a number of voids to fill in those schedules. The only non-conference slot filled for the 2001 campaign is a home date with New Mexico State. 2002 features non-conference matchups with Southwest Louisiana, Utah State and Arkansas State, while Eastern Michigan is the only non-conference opponent set in the 2003 schedule.

The Wildcats have two open dates to fill in 2001, one in 2002 and three in 2003.

Baseball team goes 2-2 at tourney, faces 8-5 Niagara tonight at home

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team returns to Wayne Norvell Field, its makeshift Manhattan home last season, to face Niagara tonight at 7 p.m.

K-State (7-16 overall, 1-10 Big 12) enters the two-game series with Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference member Niagara (8-5, 6-0) coming off the Homestead Challenge Tournament in which the Cats went 2-2 and finished in third place.

The Wildcats were without two of their top pitchers in spot starters Kurt Lehrmann (1-1, 7.30 ERA) and Derek Ver Helst (0-2, 8.03). Stepping in were sophomore Chad Duckers and freshman Todd Lundwall.

Duckers (2-2, 7.40) came on in relief of senior Jason Wells (0-5, 9.44) against Central Connecticut and pitched four innings of shutout ball to pick up the win, but he dropped a decision to Harvard three days later. Duckers picked up a quality start, throwing seven innings while giving up four runs, two earned, on six hits.

Lundwall (1-0, 6.00) got his first start for the Cats against Harvard and threw a 10-inning complete game in K-State's 3-2 win. Lundwall gave up two runs on seven hits while striking out seven and walking two. It was just the second complete game of the season for K-State.

From the plate, the Cats hit a collective .310 during the four-game stretch, nearly 40 points higher than the team average for the year.

In three of the four games, K-State managed more than 10 hits, a feat the Cats had accomplished only five times so far in the season.

K-State's hitting attack was boosted by junior catcher Nick Scelfo and freshman designated hitter and first baseman Pat Maloney. The pair each had stepped up to the plate 12 times this season prior to the tournament.

Maloney went 6-14 scoring one run, while Scelfo knocked in seven RBIs in the Cats game against Central Connecticut, while also cracking his first home run at K-State.

Predictions impossible for this year's topsy-turvy NCAA men's tournament

Why do I even bother?

Why do I even mess around with this whole March Madness tournament pool tomfoolery?

Honestly, filling out a NCAA men's basketball tournament bracket is the most fruitless endeavor of my spring season.

I spend hours pouring over my brackets like they are the Dead Sea Scrolls. I work out every matchup and every possibility. I check the stats and the odds. I study past tournaments, double-check the chances that a No. 9 seed will advance, and I remind myself that the game between the No. 5 seed and No. 12 seed is the best possibility for a true upset, and we all know that upsets make or break a bracket.

I check tournament locations, the alignment of the stars and which team has the best zodiac chemistry. I do anything and everything to get an edge.

I somehow forget the fact that "bracket time" directly coincides with "mid-term time."

I snuggle up with a blank bracket, a calculator, extra No. 2 pencils, a breakdown of every team and act like I'm translating the Rosetta Stone. Forget studying calculus, tournament time is important.

No matter how much time and effort I put into my selection process every year, I'm out of the running by the end of the second day. It never fails.

My bracket becomes the international model of who not to pick. After the first round, my bracket looks like Anderson Avenue in the spring: torn to hell.

Of course, as a law-abiding, god-fearing man of good will, I never enter those sinful "illegal" pools worth money.

Oh no, I'm going strictly for pride here, but my pride has taken a beating. I can handle losing three bucks to some guy in my bowling league who copied his picks straight out of "The Sporting News," but I'm losing to 10-year-olds who make their picks with Pokemon cards. This has really gotten out of hand.

Who would have guessed that the Elite Eight would have only one No. 1 seed, or that the North Carolina Tar Heels, a team that made the field of 64 on tradition only, would be one game away from playing for the national title?

Never before has a team with 13 losses advanced to the Final Four. This year there are two: North Carolina and Wisconsin.

And since the NCAA began seeding teams in 1979, only two teams with lower seeds than No. 8 have made it to the Final Four.

What does this mean? That there is no way anyone could have picked this bracket?

No way.

Picking this year's Final Four is like picking Edgerrin James as the fourth pick in last year's NFL draft. It was simply unknowable.

Heck, Wisconsin's leading scorer, Mark Vershaw, averages only 11.9 points per game. The Michigan State Spartans, on the other hand, have three players who average more than Vershaw. The Spartans also happen to have experience, speed, a tenacious point guard in Mateen Cleaves and one of the best defenses in the nation.

The Wisconsin Badgers have, well, Ron Dayne, this year's Heisman trophy winner.

The Tar Heels had, until the tournament came along, the greatest collection of untapped talent in America. They also had a great deal of criticism and skepticism. Just two weeks ago they were the textbook definition of potential. Now they're a sparkling example of late-bloomers.

What really irks me is that somewhere out there is some jerk who graduated from North Carolina back in 1973 that picked the Tar Heels to go all the way to the Final Four just because he is an alumni, and now he's jumping around like he's some kind of prophet because he had the foresight to pick such a risky team.

I'm stuck with the world's ugliest bracket wondering why the heck I actually thought St. Bonaventure could beat Kentucky in the first round. Sure, it was an overtime game, but what was I thinking?

The good news for both North Carolina and Wisconsin is that of the two No. 8 seeds that made the final four one of them, Villanova in 1985, won the championship game. Does that mean that I think one of this year's No. 8 seeds will win it all?

No. But then again, this is coming from a guy who thought the Dayton Flyers would find themselves in the Sweet Sixteen, and trust me, there is nothing sweet about that.

EMS ORGANIZED for inevitable CHAOS

STORY BY DANICA COTO ■ PHOTOS BY EVAN SEMON

Riley County staff encounters daily challenges at work

People call her wanting to get a divorce, wanting their neighbor's dog to shut up, wanting someone to fix their broken water line.

But Michelle Rutherford can't do any of this — she's Riley County's EMS assistant director. In the old phonebook, she said, EMS is listed under city offices, and sometimes people don't realize the number they're calling.

It's a good thing these phone calls are rare because Rutherford already gets an average of eight to nine calls in a 24-hour shift.

"If it's a big, stressful call, your adrenaline starts pumping," she said. "Nobody can tell you that they've been there and seen it all."

She first started working in this field when she took a semester off at K-State and enrolled in an emergency medical technician class. After the six-month class, she started working at Wamego City Hospital for two years and then came to Manhattan. She became a paramedic and worked her way up to her present position.

Although Rutherford said she enjoys the management part of her job, she said she misses going out and working with people.

"It's kind of nervous when you go out there and work independently. It's not a controlled setting," Rutherford said. "I do miss working the streets. I know that doesn't sound right, but that's what it's called."

She said she's encountered all sorts of physical and emotional challenges: helping people out of a car wreck for more than an hour, caring for hurt children and being on the scene after a suicide call.

"These are things that stick in your mind quite a bit," she said. "I think you either have it or you don't. Most people know. It's kind of an innate thing."

When EMS gets a call to the crime scene, Rutherford said they take care of the patient while trying not to disturb evidence. However, if it's a suicide call, the police will go in first to ensure safety, she said.

Former Captain Brian Smith said in 1999, they had a total of 3,063 calls, with 1,282 being emergency runs.

"The top two medical emergencies are always going to be cardiac and respiratory stress," he said.

The second most common emergency runs were for traumas, such as a fracture of the arm or leg.

However, not all calls are serious. "The funnier one was one or two children that got stuck in a sofa bed," Rutherford said.

Rutherford oversees a total of 17 employees, coordinates their shifts and schedules and, in addition, does paperwork and payroll. The schedules are created for a whole year, something Bill Finn, emergency medical technician intermediate, said makes his job easier.

Finn, like most of his colleagues, works a 24-hour shift that starts at 7 a.m. He works three of these shifts with 24 hours off in between each, and he then gets four days off.

"People in EMS have very sporadic sleeping patterns," he said. "At first it was really difficult. My moods kind of change a little when I don't get a certain amount of sleep."

But he's always alert when he gets a call and has to care for a patient, he said.

"I don't know what it is, but hearing the bells go off, the telephone ringing, it's something internal that wakes you up," he said.

Finn has been working in Manhattan for six years and said he wants to become a paramedic eventually. He first became interested in this field when he was a child.

"I've always had a feel for EMS and fire," he said. "My father was a firefighter, and I lived in a town where I saw big wrecks. I never found it affecting me as much."

Finn also works part-time as a bus driver in Pottawotamie County, where his wife works, too. They've both worked out a schedule that allows them to have family day on Sundays, he said.

One of his most memorable experiences happened four years ago when a bus overturned on Wildcat Creek Road. No one was hurt or needed medical attention, but one student expressed reservations.

"One said, 'My mom thinks I should go to the hospital,' and then all of a sudden all eight of them wanted to go," Finn said.

Although Finn said he took this job because he likes helping people, he said he has the most fun when the staff is together, cleaning trucks or eating dinner.

"I don't want to say all of it is fun because it's not," he said. "Everything is truly challenging because you don't know what you're going to run into. Dealing with children is one of the most difficult aspects of the job. You really have to think like a child."

The Riley County EMS offers courses for those interested in working in the field. The total costs vary for each position, but Finn said people take the classes because they're serious about the job.

"You have to be pretty committed," he said.

Health QUESTION

By: Carol Kennedy

Director of health education and promotion at Lalene Health Center

Q: What causes a "Charley Horse"?

A: A "Charley Horse" is an involuntary contraction of a muscle. Also known as a muscle cramp, a "Charley Horse" typically occurs in the legs, calves or feet.

The muscle becomes hard and knotted, most likely during or after prolonged exercise. Cramping is occasionally related to salt (or electrolyte) depletion associated with physical activity. Night cramping of the calf muscle can occur several hours after strenuous exercise. The tendency for the calf muscle to contract during sleep is aggravated by the covers forcing the toes to point downward.

The best treatment for cramps in general is stretching the affected muscle, applying warmth to the muscle and replacing salt/fluids lost during exercise. Repeated or persistent cramping with adequate salt and fluid replacement should be reported to physician or trainer.

Vitamin C may conflict with cancer therapy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — Cancer patients who take large doses of vitamin C in the hope of a cure might actually make their disease worse by inadvertently protecting their tumors from radiation and chemotherapy, new research suggests.

Doctors caution they cannot prove the vitamin is harmful during cancer treatment. They say there are strong biological reasons to think megadoses could be bad.

The concern is based on the discovery that cancer cells actually contain large amounts of vitamin C, which appears to protect them from oxygen damage. Many cancer treatments, especially radiation therapy, work by triggering oxygen damage to the genes of cancer cells.

Dr. David Golde, physician-in-chief at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York City, warned against too much vitamin C in a presentation Monday at a meeting of the American Cancer Society.

Vitamin C has many adherents, in part because it is an antioxidant, a substance that protects the body from potentially harmful oxygen particles known as free radicals. Oxidation — the same process that rusts iron — is suspected of triggering cancer and other disease.

Health experts recommend that people eat plenty of fruits and vegetables because they are good sources of antioxidant nutrients, among other things. Many people routinely take high doses of vitamin C and other antioxidants in the belief that they will prevent or cure illnesses.

However, doctors caution that even though various nutritional supplements are natural, this does not necessarily mean they are also safe or effective, especially when combined with other treatments.

Dr. Barrie R. Cassileth, a medical sociologist who studies vitamin and herbal remedies at Memorial Sloan-Kettering, noted that vitamin C fell from favor as a cancer treatment in 1985 after a Mayo Clinic study found it to be worthless. But it has recently returned to vogue, and some practitioners give extremely high doses to cancer patients as an addition to ordinary treatment or even as a substitute.

In 1993, Golde's team discovered how vitamin C gets into human cells. They found that an oxidized form of vitamin C called dehydroascorbic acid enters cells through the same opening used by sugar. Once inside, it is immediately converted back to vitamin C.

He said a key feature of many cancers is they have many more of these sugar openings than do ordinary cells. This allows them to take in the energy they need to grow.

But he said cancer cells often also have very high concentrations of vitamin C. The exact function of the vitamin inside cancer is unknown.

"My experience as a biologist would say it is no accident," said Golde. "The cancer cell wants vitamin C because it wants antioxidant protection."

Among cancer's uses for the vitamin, he said, could be protection against the harmful effect of radiation therapy, as well as some forms of chemotherapy that work by inducing oxygen damage.

Vitamin-rich food and multivitamins are safe for cancer patients, Golde said, but he routinely advises cancer patients to avoid gram-size doses of vitamin C while under treatment.

Dr. Harmon Eyre, medical director of the cancer society, said Golde's work suggests it is especially important to avoid big doses of vitamin C during radiation treatment, which works in large part through triggering oxygen damage. Lab experiments have also shown that loading cancer cells with vitamin C can make them resist radiation treatment.

"It argues to cancer patients that supplements need to be thought through very carefully," he said.

Earlier this month, researchers from the University of Southern California presented data at a conference suggesting that vitamin C pills may speed up clogging of the arteries, the underlying cause of heart attacks and strokes.

Some of Golde's work on vitamin C and cancer was published last September in the journal "Cancer Research."

Tensions rise as family appeals fate of 6-year-old Cuban boy

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Justice Department said Monday that the Miami relatives caring for Elian Gonzalez had failed to comply with a government demand that they promise to surrender him for return to his father if they lose a court appeal.

Meanwhile, relatives filed a court appeal designed to meet a government deadline, and the 6-year-old Cuban boy described in his first TV interview how the boat bringing him and his mother from Cuba sank. He said he doesn't believe his mother is dead.

Although the relatives asked a federal appeals court to set an expedited schedule for hearing an appeal, their letter to Attorney General Janet Reno did not meet the other demand she made Friday night.

"We do not consider them in compliance with Friday's letter," Justice spokeswoman Carole Florman said. "They have not agreed to provide written assurances they will comply with Immigration and Naturalization Service instructions if they do not prevail in the appeals court and cannot obtain a stay from the Supreme Court."

Florman said the Justice Department had responded in court to the family's request for an expedited appeal that was not so swift as the government had hoped and that a new letter would be sent to the family laying how the government proposed to proceed from here.

Florman would not describe the government's next steps.

But in Friday's letter, Reno said if the family did not comply, it should be available for a meeting Tuesday to discuss Elian's future and that the government might change his status in this country by Thursday, which could mean INS would try to move him to different custodians while the appeal is heard.

Also today, about 100 people gathered outside the Little Havana home where the 6-year-old boy has been staying.

The Democracy Movement, a Cuban exile group, has called for people to form a human chain around the home of Elian's great-uncle in case the government tries to remove him and send him back to his father in Cuba.

Elian was kept home today and won't return to school out of fears that Cuba might try to force him back to the island, family spokesman Armando Gutierrez said.

In the interview broadcast on ABC's "Good Morning America," Elian drew crayon pictures of the voyage in which his mother and 10 other people drowned.

He first drew a wavy line representing waves, then a leaping dolphin — he has told people that dolphins protected him from sharks and boosted him up when he slipped down into the water from an inner tube.

He drew himself as a stick figure on the inner tube and then sketched a boat with people inside. He told of the boat having engine trouble and slowly sinking, and of attempts to bail it out.

Asked what happened to the boat, he said softly: "Water came in."

He drew the waves higher and higher, covering the boat, and insisted his mother survived.

"My mother is not in heaven, not lost," he said in Spanish through his cousin Marisleydis Gonzalez, who is raising him.

"She must have been picked up here in Miami somewhere. She must have lost her memory and just doesn't know I'm here."

Marisleydis Gonzalez gently reminded him that he knows what really happened to his mother, and he gazed downward.

Facing a noon deadline, Elian's Florida relatives filed a motion for an expedited appeals process to sort out the international custody dispute.

The motion asks the federal appeals court to set a schedule for arguments in the family's appeal of a federal judge's ruling affirming the INS decision to return Elian to Cuba.

A judge could set the schedule as early as this week, court officials said. It could be weeks before the case is resolved.

"The court of appeals is in the best situation to determine what is fair and what this appeal needs to be heard fairly, not the Department of Justice," attorney Linda Osberg-Braun told reporters this afternoon.

Osberg-Braun said Elian's relatives also had agreed to comply with a Justice Department demand asking them to turn over the boy to the INS if the family loses its appeal and fails to obtain a stay of the INS order from the Supreme Court.

Since his arrival last November, Elian has been under the constant glare of cameras, typically seen playing in the front yard of his great-uncle's home or walking to school, but the ABC interview was the first time he had directly talked to the media.

SALINA

K-State has a campus in their town. With open house, we can make everyone aware of what we do."

Karcz said that within the technology department, there will be robotics displays and the Mini Baja club will be showing its car, which will be competing with in the Society of Automotive Engineers' Mini Baja West competition at K-State in April.

The electronics department also will be having a presentation of its solar boat that will be competing in the Solar Splash competition this summer. The solar boat is much like the solar car that the main campus takes to competitions every summer.

Karcz said the 12th annual chili cook-off, student and parent panels, a Web page design contest sponsored by the Association for Computing Machinery, computer simulations, the workings of lasers and representatives from financial aid, housing and student services will be available as part of the festivities.

King said the committee has been publicizing the event to high school students and the community in hopes of making people more aware of what students do and what the Salina campus has to offer in the many different academic areas.

"I think open house is important because it gives us the opportunity to take pride in showing our school," King said. "Potential students can see what we do and make the decision about if they want to become involved in aviation, technology, computers, mechanics or anything this campus has to offer."

said. "He said he'd have to get back with me."

Asbury said he didn't hear anything until Feb. 22, when his attorney told him he'd heard from the university attorney and Asbury would be fired that Friday.

Asbury called Urlick the next day. "He said that Wefald wanted me to resign this weekend, but to keep coaching the team ... Max said that Wefald wanted to make the decision now so a search could get started," Asbury said.

Later that day he was told the university had decided to wait until after the season.

From that day until the end of the season, Asbury said, "I did not hear a single word in regard to the job in a face-to-face conversation."

"The timing of the gift is borderline bizarre," she said.

R.J. Reynolds would not comment on the donation. It is company policy not to respond to student publications due to the fact that some college-age students are not of legal smoking age. However, in the March 24 publication of The Manhattan Mercury, R.J. Reynolds director of corporate communications John Singleton said, "Our donation of the equipment has nothing to do with any other issue going on in Manhattan, Kans., or anywhere else."

Hellebust said it might be true that the gift doesn't have anything to do with the proposed ordinance, but the point still is there.

"They are trying to diffuse public and private opposition," she said. "These kinds of actions can curtail discussion of people who stand in opposition."

John Pepperdine, manager for governmental relations for the American Cancer Society, said the R.J. Reynolds donation doesn't come as a big surprise to him or other opponents of the tobacco industry.

"It doesn't take any stretch of the imagination to see the timing of this gift," he said.

Pepperdine, along with Hellebust and Keller, said he does not pass judgment on K-State for accepting the gift.

"That's up to the university to decide," he said.

Student Body President Jason Heinrich, who helped write the Student Senate resolution supporting the ordinance, said he thinks R.J.

Reynolds motives had something to do with the no-smoking proposal.

"I think it's pretty obvious that they were trying to buy the community," he said. "It was an attempt. I think the commissioners are aware of what they were doing. The support is there regardless though."

Keller said she didn't think the R.J. Reynolds' gift would influence the city commissioners.

"I have every hope and every confidence that the Manhattan City Commissioners will vote for a strong smoke-free ordinance," she said. "The commissioners understand that tobacco smoke is the single leading preventable cause of death in our state, and the commissioners know that most people do not smoke, and they want to be able to have a meal without threatening their health."

McCulloh said the commission wants to avoid any economic hardship on local businesses.

"We don't want to put anyone out of business," she said.

Lucky BrewGrille owner Bob Leetch said he fears a ban on smoking in bars will cause economic loss. He said he believes local governments shouldn't interfere with business' rights.

"It is arrogant and completely wrong for an agency to tell me how to run my business," Leetch said. "No one has the right to do that. Are they looking out for their own self-interests or what the people really want? Bullying customers into doing what you want them to do isn't right."

Leetch said public proposals should be determined by the market, not local governments.

"When the market changes then we will change. Everything should be determined by the free market," he said. "You wouldn't believe how many people smoke here. Establishing a smoking ordinance isn't going to get people to quit. They will just go somewhere else."

Reitz said the commission will look into whether a smoking proposal would intrude on business rights.

"Everyone would agree that smoking carries serious health repercussions," he said. "But the question is how much intrusion should the government have on people's private lives?"

would be," Urlick said. "When I became concerned as January and February moved in, I had another meeting with Tom in mid-February."

"We discussed then the fortunes of the basketball team, recalled the criteria, and we discussed the potential conclusion of the season."

As the meeting concluded, according to Urlick, Asbury said his attorney would be in touch.

Urlick said from that point on he let his attorneys hash out the details, and that is why there was limited contact between Asbury and Urlick.

He also responded to Asbury's comments that in his tenure, basketball had never been put on a level playing field with football.

"Football is the greatest friend the other sports can have," Urlick said. "It gives us access and exposure all across the country — they know about football. It really is a great asset to the other programs. I am not sure why Tom is so paranoid about the football program."

When asked why Asbury was handed a piece of paper while still surrounded by members of the program, Urlick said that was the agreement. Urlick said he wishes Asbury luck, and he is excited about the fresh start for the program under newly hired head coach Jim Wooldridge.

"Jim Wooldridge is a great fit for the program," Urlick said.

He said Wooldridge is busy himself with recruiting and other items related to K-State basketball.

President Jon Wefald who wanted him fired, not Urlick. But Wefald said the decision was entirely Urlick's.

"He's our athletics director. He's in charge of all sports at Kansas State University. He has the authority to sign contracts, and he's the one who does the evaluations of coaches at the end of the season," Wefald said Monday.

Asbury said he did not have a face-to-face meeting about his future with anyone in the administration until Feb. 11, when he asked for a meeting with Urlick.

"I hadn't heard a word, and I wanted to know what he thought was needed to save our jobs," Asbury Jake Worcester and Dana Pracht celebrate after being elected student body president and vice president. They received 1,078 votes, or 58 percent of the votes cast. Worcester and Pracht will take office April 6.

GETTING STARTED

Worcester, Pracht prepare to take office, focus on campaign issues

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

April 6 is fast approaching for newly elected student body president and vice president Jake Worcester and Dana Pracht.

Worcester, junior in agricultural economics, and Pracht, junior in pre-health, will be inaugurated as student body president and vice president by the Student Governing Association next Thursday.

Travis Lenkner, campaign manager for Worcester and Pracht and Student Senate governmental relations chair, said the turnover will come a week late due to Worcester's current position in SGA. As Senate chair, Worcester will have to lead K-State's Senate meetings for a week past the usual turnover deadline, until a new student can be voted into the position.

"They both would be put in this Thursday, but they have to choose a new Senate chair beforehand," Lenkner said.

Worcester said the first task for the next student body president and vice president would be filling positions around the SGA offices.

"The first thing out of the box, we're looking to put together our cabinet," he said. "That will help us put together the goals we decided on during our campaign."

Applications for cabinet positions are due April 14 in the Office of Student Activities and Services, and both Worcester and Pracht said they were hoping to attract a wide variety of SGA hopefuls.

"We're looking for a diverse cabinet, with as many opinions and ideas as possible," Pracht said. "We're very open-minded, and we're just looking for a combination of various opinions."

Worcester said he hoped to finish most universitywide appointments by the end of the semester.

Once appointments and additional SGA elections are over, the pair would begin work on platform issues from the student body presidential campaign, Lenkner said.

"They're really committed to keeping everything within the focus of their three campaign issues: academic quality, technology advancement and student life," he said.

Special positions within SGA have been created in order to bring attention to these concerns, Worcester said. Also under these categories, issues dealing with the Board of Regents and Wildcat Welcome Week will be evaluated.

While Worcester said his concern for tuition increases, financial aid and other board-related issues would require frequent trips to the Kansas Statehouse, Pracht said she would look at strengthening the welcome week to aid attendance.

"We want to increase participation and increase pride at K-State," she said.

Worcester's presidency might focus on these three issues, but ideas brought about by other campaigns could turn up during the next year.

"Some of the campaigns brought up good issues about advising and GTAs," Worcester said. "Transportation was not specifically talked about, but we're going to play a big role in it next year."

Exploring the many duties the positions of student body president and vice president entail will be a large part of the pair's job during the first few weeks, Pracht said.

"I really think the big thing for me is to listen and learn a lot about what we're going to do," she said. "We're going to interact with students and visit with organizations. We want to take time to get things started so we can get off on the right foot."

Summer 2000 will be a great time to ready the SGA for a new semester of classes, Worcester said.

"We're going to spend most of the summer getting our feet under us and getting some groundwork laid," he said.

Commission discusses ordinance

■ Citywide smoking issue sparks debate among citizens; further study suggested.

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All five members of the Manhattan City Commission agreed at a planning session Tuesday night that they want to look into an anti-smoking ordinance. The question, though, is how to be fair to everyone.

In a debate that dominated the session, citizens spoke for and against a proposed ordinance to limit smoking in bars and restaurants across Manhattan. The proposal was submitted by the Manhattan-Riley County Health Department through its director, Charles Murphy.

The proposal suggested all food-service establishments create non-smoking zones taking up at least half of the establishment's floor space and maintain separate ventilation and floor-to-ceiling barriers for the smoking areas in addition to signs spelling out the areas.

Several proponents of the ordinance, introduced by Murphy, said studies have shown such an ordinance would serve health interests and not hurt existing businesses.

Judy Keller, associate director of the American Lung Association of Kansas, said she wanted the commission to consider the lungs of the community.

"It's the rule of government to make sure things are done for the public good," she said.

Julie Sargent of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment said Manhattan is home to 5,462 adults and about 2,794 children with asthma who are at risk of attacks caused by cigarette smoke. Bars have made arrangements for those with Magazine suit reaches verdict

By RICHARD SMITH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IntelliSports finally had its day in court last week, more than 1 1/2 years after originally filing suit against Tim Fitzgerald, publisher and editor of Powercat Illustrated.

IntelliSports, which produces rival fan magazine Purple Pride, was victorious on two of five counts brought against Fitzgerald and Spirit Street Publishing, Powercat Illustrated's parent company.

The judgment, handed down March 23, will not block publication of Powercat Illustrated. Fitzgerald and Spirit Street will be required to pay $15,000 in damages, and they also are barred from using a list of Purple Pride subscribers.

The penalties are significantly less than what the plaintiffs originally had sought. IntelliSports had requested damages in excess of $440,000, as well as an injunction that would have prevented Powercat Illustrated from serving subscribers who formerly had subscribed to Purple Pride.

Patrick Whalen, attorney for IntelliSports, said the discrepancy between the plaintiff's damages requested and damages received might lead to an appeal of the decision.

Students play key role in Manhattan's eligibility for federal funding

By KELLIE MILLER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

College students are a key factor in Manhattan's standing in the 2000 federal census.

Manhattan Senior City Planner Ockert Fourie said the Manhattan population was undercounted in the 1990 census, and the group that mainly was undercounted was the college population. For this reason, he said it is important that students fill out the federal forms, which were mailed March 13, and send them back quickly.

"It is going to determine a lot," he said.

However Sherman Parks Jr., district manager for the census office in Topeka, said he is concerned about some problems that might deter students from filling out the form. He said because the forms were mailed the week before spring break, students could forget about the forms when they return to school.

The State of Kansas Census Adjustment Questionnaires, which recently were placed on the KATS, also might cause confusion for students.

Anyone who meets the definition of student is required to fill out this state questionnaire, said Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life. The state mandates that every college in Kansas have a 100-percent student compliance rate.

Students had to fill out the questionnaire before they were allowed to access their KATS account, Jones said.

Fourie said the city is aware some students might be confused when they receive the federal form because they already have filled out the form on KATS. But the forms are different, he said.

"Through providing information, we are trying to clear up some of the confusion," he said.

The state form differs from the federal form because it allows students and military to choose from listing their permanent residence as Manhattan or their hometown, Jones said.

The federal census specifically asks where a person is on April 1, Parks said.

"Census is nothing but a snapshot of America on April 1," he said.

Jones said Manhattan is close to the 50,000 population mark, which would enable Manhattan to become

There is a questionnaire assistance center in Nolton 102, the Office of Student Life, for students who need help filling out their forms, have lost their forms and need a duplicate or who need a form in an alternate language. The center is open Tuesday and Thursday 1:30 to 4:30, or students can call 532-6432 for assistance.

WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE?

State of Kansas Census Adjustment Questionnaire

- K-State students complete the questionnaire on KATS.
- Federal census numbers are refigured with Kansas questionnaire responses to determine state electoral districts.
- Only students and military are required to fill it out.
- Respondants have the option of choosing Manhattan or their hometown as their permanent address.

Federal census

- This census form is not available on KATS.
- It determines city populations for the purpose of allocating federal funds and determining federal electoral districts.
- Students must complete the federal census, even if they complete the state questionnaire on KATS.
- The census asks specifically where the respondent is on April 1.
- If the Manhattan population is tallied at more than 50,000, it will be eligible for additional federal funding for community projects and improvements.

an entitlement city. As an entitlement city, Manhattan would have greater access to federal funds and no longer would be competing with smaller towns, Jones said.

"Manhattan is at a crossroads in its growth," he said. "We are very close to a magic mark."

Fourie said it is more difficult to get funding at the city's present status and becoming an entitlement city allows the city to provide better services to its residents.

"Things like a public transportation system would be eligible for funding," he said.

In 1990, Manhattan's population was counted at 37,712, and Fourie said the city approached the federal government afterwards concerning the undercount. In 1994, it was adjusted to 43,000 when the city annexed the university.

However, Fourie said it never took into account the undercount.

When the census takers went on follow-up calls to the households that had not returned their federal form, Fourie said they went around in June after the students had left for the summer. The addresses then were reported as vacant homes.

He said that is why they are encouraging students to mail the forms back in quickly. Expense also is lessened — it costs the government $2 if the form is mailed back promptly and $38 if the census office has to send out a census taker.

Parks said his office is sensitive to this previous student issue.

"We can't wait around till the end of May," he said.

Parks also said the similar timing of the Kansas and federal census doesn't enhance his office's chance of getting a complete count, but it doesn't hurt them, either.

"It all comes down to education and awareness," he said.

Paul Schimming, senior in music education, said he was aware that the federal census was coming but also agrees that some students might be uninformed.

"There might be a little confusion with students throwing away the federal form they got in Manhattan," he said.

Kansas is the only state to do a separate census, which adjusts federal census numbers to determine the state legislative districts, Jones said.

Fourie said the state census only benefits the city by determining state electoral districts, and that's it.

"The federal census is more important to us," he said. "It does provide demographic information for all kinds of research."

These demographics help the city plan for needed improvements within the community, such as housing and street repairs. Entitlement cities have a greater opportunity to receive funding for these types of improvements, Ockert said.

The federal census has been required since 1790, Parks said, and 23 of the 25 top federal agencies base their funding, around $100 billion, on census figures.

The federal government uses the figures to allocate money to community programs and services,

Columbine shooting details to be released on CD-ROM

DENVER — Authorities have decided to release in late May an edited report on the Columbine High School shooting rampage, after consulting with victims' families about the best time to make it public.

Jefferson County sheriff's officials want to minimize additional trauma for the families by editing out graphic details. They also want to avoid releasing the report around April 20, one year after the attack.

The report will be issued in late May on CD-ROM, with about 200 pages of text, and video and audio data, Undersheriff John Dunaway said. It has yet to be completely assembled, he said.

"What we are trying to do is create a shared understanding with the nation about this event," Dunaway told a governor's commission Monday.

The public report will exclude grisly details and information about the continuing investigation, Dunaway said.

"We frankly just don't believe that is something that needs to be shared," he said.

Tom Mauser, whose son Daniel was killed, said he favors the exclusion of some details.

"We, as parents, had the opportunity to sit down with investigators months ago and went through any amount of detail that we wanted to go through," he said.

"Certainly some of those details, including a picture of my dead son on the library floor, I would not want released to the public. I saw and heard some things that were just very difficult."

Some victims' families were upset that the department plans to withhold some of the details from the public.

"I want the full version," Angela Sanders, daughter of slain teacher Dave Sanders, said in Tuesday's Denver Rocky Mountain News.

Teen-agers Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold stormed Columbine last April, killing 12 students and Sanders and wounding about two dozen others before committing suicide.

Dunaway said authorities have no evidence suggesting anyone other than Harris and Klebold was involved, but have kept the probe open to preserve the ability to prosecute such an individual or individuals.

The sheriff's department has been criticized by victims' families in the past, when Sheriff John Stone allowed a magazine reporter to see videotapes made by the gunmen before the family members viewed them.

An article about the videos was published shortly before the Christmas holidays, causing fresh grief for the victims' families.

Topeka teen charged with battery, 2nd-degree murder

TOPEKA — A Kansas teen-ager accused of driving while legally drunk has been charged with reckless second-degree murder in the death of one of his passengers.

David D. Tofflemire, 16, who was arrested Monday, also is charged with three counts of aggravated battery, all felonies.

The February crash killed Kristi Leiker, 15, who had been riding in the rear cargo compartment of Tofflemire's sport-utility vehicle when he crashed more than 50 yards through a grove of trees and struck a tree head-on. Leiker, of Topeka, was ejected from the vehicle and died at the scene.

At a news conference Monday night, Sgt. Michael Kolbek said the district attorney's office was seeking to try Tofflemire as an adult.

Tofflemire's blood-alcohol level, taken shortly after the accident, measured 0.14 percent, Kolbek said. A teen-ager in Kansas is legally intoxicated with a blood-alcohol level of .02 percent, and adults can be charged with driving under the influence at .08 percent.

Three other teen-agers and one adult also were arrested and charged Monday for their role in the crash.

Arrested were Grant W. Stephens, Jason B. Neis and Travis D. Rogers, all 16.

Stephens and Neis, both passengers, were charged with one count of possession of alcohol by a minor. Neis also was charged with one count of marijuana possession.

Rogers was charged with three counts of furnishing alcohol to a minor and one count of possession by a minor. Michael Liberato, 23, was arrested on three misdemeanor charges of furnishing alcohol to a minor.

Speaker discusses women in 19th-century insane asylums

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Having too high of a sex drive, disobeying a husband, depression and being overly emotional are only a few reasons women of the 19th century were sent to insane asylums.

Susan Carlson, professor of English at Pittsburg State University, gave the presentation "Women and Madness on the Kansas Frontier" Tuesday night in the K-State Student Union.

The presentation, sponsored by the Kansas Humanities Council, discussed how women in the mid-to-late 1800s lived and how the walls of insane asylums sometimes became a home for many.

Carlson said the definition of insanity in the 1800s was called moral insanity and was extremely different from today's definition.

"You were declared insane if you steered away from the society's goals of what a woman was supposed to be," she said. "If you were too angry, if you were too sexual, if you yelled at your husband too much, if you suffered from postpartum depression — all of those things could put you in an insane asylum."

She said the lack of knowledge about hormones during that time caused many women to be committed. When women would go through menstruation, menopause or suffer from premenstrual syndrome, their moods would change, causing them to be committed for hysteria.

"You were always on the verge of hysteria," Carlson said.

She said three main reasons women were sent to the asylums were neurasthenia, a condition of nervous debility; depression and nymphomania.

Women who talked too much or who were considered too nosy were treated by having a metal bridle strapped around their mouths.

Another method placed women in work houses. She said women in these houses were raped constantly.

Carlson said a common method to treat nymphomania was to apply leeches to the female's vagina. The pain she suffered was to decrease her sex drive. Other methods used were burning the ovaries and cutting out the clitoris.

Men could take their wives to the asylums at any time and without their consent, she said. Sometimes, men would pack their wives into the car and not tell them where they were taking them.

"He could take you there without you knowing it," Carlson said. "And he decided when you left."

Asylums in Kansas were some of the first ones to begin treating the insane with moral management, Carlson said. The idea was to provide a family-like setting for the women, caring for them and keeping them busy in order to bring them back to normality.

"The idea was if you were constantly working, you'd be cured," she said. "They thought it'd make them strong to fight off the illness."

Carlson said patients were released when their physical appearance seemed normal.

"Doctors didn't really care about what was in your head," Carlson said. "They cared what you looked like."

Emily Evers, senior in family life and community service, said she was amazed by how many women were considered insane and by how harsh the treatments were.

"I didn't know it was that common, either," Evers said.

Truman Scholarship awarded

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The announcement of K-State's 25th Truman Scholar marks a continuation of its traditional top ranking among the nation's public universities in the production of Truman Scholars.

Sarah Glaser, senior in biology and natural resources and environmental science, said she was not expecting to receive the award.

"I was extremely overwhelmed when I first found out," she said. "I'm extremely excited."

Glaser said she was not expecting the award because she did not think she met the requirements the Truman Scholarship wanted as she is geared more toward the sciences.

Beth Powers, scholarship adviser, said the scholarship requires that the winner be committed to a career in public service.

Glaser said she supposed the scholarship reflected her desire to work in public policy.

"It reflects my interest in being able to merge those two things, science research and using the research to establish effective public policy advocacy," she said.

Glaser has to use $3,000 of the $30,000 scholarship toward her last year of undergraduate study at K-State. After that, Glaser said she did not have any concrete plans for the scholarship, but what she would like to do is study abroad in Australia at the James Cook University, where she would study marine ecology. Then, she would come back to the United States and go to graduate school.

"I'm really interested in preserving coral reef habitats," she said.

Glaser said after graduate school she would like to work for a non-profit organization or a government agency to establish marine protection areas and close endangered habitats for rehabilitation purposes.

Activities in which Glaser has participated while at K-State include the K-State Debate Team, Students for Environmental Action and Commission on the Status for Women, which reports to the president.

As part of the debate team, Glaser has been a three-time

Academic All-American, and she has placed in the national tournament every year.

Despite all of Glaser's hard work and involvement, she said she could not have won the scholarship without the help of Powers.

"I owe everything to her," she said.

Powers, who helps the candidates with their applications, said she thinks K-State has so many Truman Scholars because K-State provides the students so many opportunities to lead and get involved.

"K-State provides these types of opportunities, and K-State students choose to get out there and get involved and have confidence to get out there and succeed in all kinds of activities," she said.

Besides benefiting Glaser, Powers said the scholarship also benefits K-State.

"It brings pride to our institution that we have students who can compete with students in some of the finest institutions in the nation," she said. "It helps give student confidence that they can win these scholarships."

Wildcat escort program offers students safe passage through campus at night

By BEN HOPPER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Those dreading the long walk home through campus late at night have the Wildcat Walk Escort Program as a safe alternative.

"We provide an escort service from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m. on campus and up to six blocks off campus," said Camie Borsdorf, student coordinator of the program.

Students who don't want to walk alone from a parking lot or their residence hall to anywhere on campus can call 395-SAFE, she said.

The police dispatcher in Edwards Hall answers the call, and a team of volunteer escorts stationed in the 24-hour study room in Hale Library is notified.

Escorts have purple arm bands and photo identification badges.

"I hate to see people walk around alone at night," said Borsdorf, senior in sociology and women studies. "This is a free service."

Keepin' it safe

Wildcat Walk Escort Program provides an escort service for those on campus from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m. The service is provided on campus and up to 6 blocks off campus.

To request an escort, call 395-SAFE. The service is free.

The program now averages one call per two-hour shift, she said.

"It picks up closer to mid-terms and finals, or when McCain Auditorium has an event," Borsdorf said.

The program, which started in the residence halls, has evolved into a campuswide service. Lt. David Johnson of the K-State Police said. Johnson is on the program's board of directors. The board consists of four faculty members and five students.

"It is a multi-layered system," Johnson said. "There is always someone to provide an escort."

If the volunteers are not available, student security members will take over the duty.

In case they are not accessible, full-time security personnel will be called. A K-State police officer also will be on-call as a third resort.

"We are always ready to accept more volunteers," Borsdorf said.

The program has about 50 student volunteers.

Volunteers fill out an application, are interviewed and attend a policy and procedures training seminar.

Zac Cook, sophomore in biological and agriculture engineering, works twice a week as a volunteer.

"Even if you can only help one or two people out, it is a good program," he said.

Most volunteers will continue to volunteer throughout their years at K-State, Borsdorf said.

"You develop a sincere commitment to keeping campus safe," she said.

Students need to fill out federal census

The census project is not complete. Not yet.

Although many students already have completed the state adjustment questionnaire via KATS, they still have one form they should complete.

The KATS form, which must be filled out before voting or enrolling online, serves only to determine where students wish to be considered a resident. This information is used to determine state legislative districts. This form only is for military personnel and students.

However, once this form is complete, students should not imagine they're finished. They still have another, longer form to fill out.

This longer questionnaire is the federal census. It should arrive in everyone's home by mail. While it takes longer to complete than the state form, it also is of vast importance.

Results compiled from this form will be used to determine federal legislative apportionments — that is, representation in Congress.

In addition, federal funding is distributed largely through information conveyed on the federal census. Twenty-three of the top 25 federal agencies use the federal census to appropriate funding.

Some students might receive this in the mail and neglect to complete it, assuming their parents will mark them down as residents of their hometown. This will not be the case.

A change on the form specifically informs census takers not to include students away at college. Therefore, it will be each student's job to complete his or her own form.

However, there can be problems. Forms were mailed out prior to K-State's spring break. This means many students probably did not receive or have lost their forms. This poses only a small problem.

New forms can be obtained in Holton 102. They are free and available in dozens of languages.

There is no valid excuse for failing to take part in the census. It takes little time and minimal effort. But its results will have lasting effects on the local, state and federal levels.

Columnist contradicts his creationist views

Editor,
Scott Roney has contradicted himself yet again.

The final statement in his column Monday stated, "It's why I reject non-science such as spontaneous generation."

If you don't believe in spontaneous generation, how can you believe in creation and not evolution? What is spontaneous generation? To be generated on the spot.

What is creationism?
To be created from nothing. Does your list of scientists make this big of an oversight when they make their arguments for or against an "incredibly intelligent God"? I hope not.

—Jason Leavitt
1998 graduate

Columnist's comments embarrasses Christian

Editor,
Here's what's sad to me: There are so many intelligent, clear-thinking Christians in this world, and the Collegian has Scott Roney.

It's not that I don't agree with his underlying premise, that there is a God, but doesn't he realize his faulty logic is more of an embarrassment to the gift of thought God has given us than it is a help to his cause?

For example, on Monday, Roney said evolution is disproved by the inherent direction toward humanity that people feel it has taken (I think this is what he said, but I'm not sure that he ever made a point outside his belief).

Anyone should be able to see this is a case of hindsight being much worse than 20/20. We humans see ourselves as the pinnacle of the process, but that's only because we are where we are in the evolutionary timeline, we have enormous egos and we ignore the facts we don't want to see. The truth is that evolution isn't through with us, and it wasn't neatly focused on Roney's birth. God, Roney forgets, "worketh signs and wonders in heaven and earth" and probably is not finished pushing us down the path of what we might become.

Also, Roney brings up that old curmudgeon Colin Patterson, of the British Field Museum of Natural History and tells us that, during lectures, "Patterson likes to ask his audiences, 'Is there anything you know about evolution — any one thing — that is true?' He usually is met by silence." I would love to see Roney actually try to hold faith up to this same question and prove it scientifically, as he says he can.

Finally, it's important to note that Jesus lays out pretty clearly what you must believe and do in order to be saved. I don't remember him ever saying anyone must believe, literally, every word of the Old Testament in order to make it to the promised land. Fundamentalists often forget sins are laid out rather well in the Bible and seeking knowledge is not one of them.

Faith is about believing there is a glory we can come to beyond this life if we follow our belief in the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. You can't prove it to people, you can't force them to accept it.

Let's move on, shall we?

—Terry L. Welch

ACTING education

So many lessons left to learn present themselves on the silver screen

So I'm basking in the post-Oscar glow. Somehow I got passed over again this year, due in part to the fact that there's no "Leading Actor in a Hysterically Cataclysmic Set of Circumstances Called a Life" category anymore. Stupid academy. My heart will go on, though.

I'm just a bystander, an observer of these awards just past. So I live vicariously through my personal favorite movies. I got to see Robin Williams' joyous rendering of "Blame Canada." "The Matrix" hauled in a pleasantly surprising load of gold and my personal favorite movie of the lot, "American Beauty," positively raked in the accolades.

Imagine my, well, puzzlement when I came across a column on CNN.com called "The Ugly Side of 'American Beauty'" by Lance Morrow. I've met lots of people who didn't like the movie — which initially surprised me, though on reflection I guess several people will find some of its subject matter (and its frank and familiar presentation) unsettling. Morrow himself is of two minds on the movie, not able to decide between admiring or detesting the movie — again, understandable. I can cope with people not enjoying the movie.

But this is where he loses me. Morrow's next assertion is that the movie, if examined from a different angle, becomes a series of clichés. Morrow draws several interesting conclusions — generalizations? — from "American Beauty": "The only sane, happy people in the American community are gay couples. Everyone else is a disaster. Heterosexual marriage is a bitter, empty charade in which man and wife despise each other, children loathe their parents and parents live in imbecile ignorance of their children." And, my favorite, "If a weird kid stares quizzically at a man with a bullet hole in his head, the kid may — if he has been smoking his own best weed — find something beautiful in the spectacle."

So, according to Morrow, movies teach us their characters and situations are conclusively representative of society as a whole. Do you realize how powerful of a learning tool this is?

Just in case you missed a key educational opportunity in the movies this year, I'll try to relate the best lessons we can extract from the educational offerings of the silver screen in the recent past.

"Angela's Ashes": All Irish families are poor, downtrodden and miserable. Life inherently stinks.

"Star Wars: The Phantom Menace": Feel free to give up your child to long-haired hippy-types who wander through town, gambling all their possessions on races. That child just might save the day tomorrow and end up enslaving the galaxy in a few years.

"Being John Malkovich": Hollywood stars act weird on occasion because other people are living out their fantasies while in control of the stars' bodies. You yourself might be able to find a portal into the consciousness of Matthew Broderick.

"The Sixth Sense": Dead people run around harassing us all the time, hiding our car keys and making the room awfully cold. Children who say odd or unusually cryptic things probably are only privy to these spirits with unfinished business. Instead of feeding the child Ritalin s'mores, you should listen to the child and attend to the incomplete lives of dead people while neglecting your own.

"The Blair Witch Project": Aspiring film students, given their own equipment, will wander into the wild and get themselves (a) lost (b) disoriented (c) emotionally shaken and (d) killed by a little-known local legend.

"Big Daddy": Even utter incompetents can adopt children and expose them to potentially psychologically damaging behavior — like watching "Big Daddy."

"South Park: Bigger, Longer and Uncut": Canadians bomb movie stars, Satan is gay and the legions of America's youth are inspired into action by Brian Boitano.

"Deuce Bigalow: Male Gigolo": You can learn nothing from this movie.

"Eyes Wide Shut": I can't tell — there was a computer-generated guy sitting in front of me for the whole movie.

"Saving Private Ryan": Duck.

"The World is Not Enough": If you don't duck and get shot in the head, hey, you'll just lose all sense of pain and be able to beat up on Her Majesty's Secret Service agents, who, for inexplicable reasons, orbit around Denise Richards.

"Boys Don't Cry": Gender-confused people in Nebraska will just get killed by narrow-minded thugs, so there's no point in challenging the conventions of society.

"End of Days": Even the primal, ancient might of Satan (who, as we've already learned, is gay) is no match for a disillusioned cop with huge pecs and an inability to accept when he's truly overmatched.

"The Green Mile": If a huge death-row inmate grabs your crotch, it's not sexual assault, but a prelude to a pseudo-magical healing wave, and you should just relax.

"The Matrix": Our reality is all an illusion. Authority figures are rogue computer programs intent on enslaving us for our body heat. Even slow-witted hackers can dodge bullets. And there is no spoon. But there just might be a spork.

ON THE WEB

"The Ugly Side of 'American Beauty'" by Lance Morrow can be found at www.cnn.com/2000/SHOWBIZ/Movies/03/24/morrow.3.24.a.1.m/index.html.

OK, this is something which should go without saying — but in light of the Morrow column, I guess someone should point it out for the cheap seats. Movies are not education. They're stories, entertainment, diversions, an excuse to shell out obscene fees for air conditioning and overbattered popcorn. They are not sermons.

They are not blueprints of American life. Accept this — you'll sleep better. "American Beauty" is not America as a whole. Relax.

Though I'd still be worried after "Wild Wild West."

Appreciation for military students lacking at K-State

My boyfriend is in the Air Force ROTC.

Twice a week, he shines his shoes until he can see his reflection in them, and he irons his uniform with perfect creases down the pant legs and down the arms. And, twice a week, he walks out the door wearing his uniform with his head held high and chest out, obviously proud to be representing his country.

So, you can imagine my surprise when he informed me that some ROTC members are embarrassed to wear their uniforms on campus.

I was confused as to why anyone would be embarrassed to show off pride in the country and a commitment to protect it.

My confusion soon abated, though, after talking to another member of the ROTC. He said that in his four years at K-State as a member of ROTC, he had been spat on twice while in uniform and called a baby-killer.

I was shocked. I understand the history of war in this country isn't pleasant, especially concerning the unpopular Vietnam War, which resulted in about 58,000 casualties.

The reality is that the Vietnam

Angela Kistner

War ended a long time ago. These men and women walking on campus in their uniforms probably weren't even a thought in their parents' minds when the Vietnam War and many of its atrocities were occurring.

The soldiers who have committed atrocities in past wars aren't the ones walking on our campus.

Now, I understand the Vietnam War isn't the only reason people disapprove of war and the military. Some have their own personal or religious reasons, which is fine.

I, myself, don't like war. I wish that disagreements between countries or between the nations of a country didn't have to be settled by war, especially when I have a boyfriend who wants to be an Air Force pilot.

I certainly dread the day his services might be called upon to help protect our country.

However, reality settles upon us again. There is going to be war. Even the Bible states there is "a time of war" in Ecclesiastes 3:8.

The reality is that someone has to protect us during those times of war, and we have to have a military that is well-prepared.

I know I'm not capable of protecting our country during war, so I appreciate the men and women who want to dedicate their time to serving and protecting our country and fighting for our freedoms.

So, next time you pass men or women on campus in military uniform, don't just pass them by, and definitely don't spit on them or call them names.

Take a look at their shiny shoes — maybe you'll see your reflection, too.

Look at their neat and pressed uniform, smile and say "thank you."

KSU students selected for financial competition

By BRIAN CLARK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's basketball team did not reach the NCAA Tournament, but another K-State team is about to reach the final rounds of their most prestigious event.

Junior Nicole Meyer and seniors Angie Herbers and Chad Boisseau will travel with faculty adviser John Grable, certified financial planner and assistant professor of family financial planning, to New York to compete in the inaugural American Express Financial Planning Invitational.

"It's a thrill to be invited," Grable said. "We're a very small program, and to be invited to the national finals in New York, out of over 100 eligible universities, it's as big as it gets."

Grable said American Express contacted the advisers of the financial-planning programs at universities all over the country and determined whether their programs met the requirements for the competition. Grable said 17 schools made the first round of competition.

Meyer, Herbers and Boisseau were selected from a pool of nine students interested in the competition. Their team was selected through an internal competition sponsored by the K-State financial-planning program, done in much the same way as the American Express competition, Grable said.

"Most of the schools only have one team," Boisseau said. "I think having gone through the competition process here will only help us in the finals."

The project central to the competition dealt with the fictional Hernandez family. The team was to analyze the family's financial situation, along with the family's income, bills, taxes and insurance.

Team members also were given a small history of the family and the goals the family wishes to achieve.

The team then was required to create a financial plan for the Hernandez family without help from their adviser, outside parties or specialized financial planning software. The proposal then was sent to judges and evaluated on a point system.

"The students were allowed to create their presentation using only Word and Excel, then present it to the judges, who then selected six teams to go to New York for the finals," Grable said.

Herbers said the team needed a lot of analytical knowledge and an intense knowledge of the formulas involved.

However, writing an actual financial plan to submit to the judges was a new concept for the team.

"I had never written a financial plan before," Boisseau said. "We needed crash courses on how to write one before the competition."

Despite their relative lack of experience, team members said they feel confident about the competition.

"Our main focus is to win," Herbers said. "We want to show everyone what we've got. The only way to go is up for us."

The team members said this competition is exactly like financial planning in the real world.

"You must be ethical and have integrity," Boisseau said. "A financial planner is not into sales, but more interested in doing good for their clients. You must have a relationship with people to help them attain their goals."

Grable said the competition will involve a "Jeopardy!" style quiz segment and an oral presentation. It also will include a variation on the original Hernandez family project, and each team will have only two hours to adjust their plan.

Financial planning, Grable said, has changed over time. He said it focuses less on corporations and business applications, and therefore has taken a more personal approach.

"About two-thirds of financial planning programs are in business schools, where they focus on corporate clients," Grable said. "The rest are in schools of human ecology, like here at K-State. Their focus is financial planning for individuals and families."

Financial-planning major offered through College of Human Ecology

By BRIAN CLARK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Everyone needs to know how to manage their money wisely, said Chad Boisseau, senior in family financial planning.

The American Express Financial Planning Invitational berth earned by three K-State financial planning students is the latest effort to try to get more attention for K-State's family financial planning program.

The family financial-planning program in the Department of Family Studies and Human Services of the College of Human Ecology, teaches students how to guide individuals and families through personal finance.

"Very few students know about the degree offered in financial planning," said John Grable, financial planner and assistant professor of family financial planning. "The first degree was offered only about five years ago."

In only five years, the K-State financial-planning program has earned a trip to New York to compete in the American Express Invitational.

Grable said most these programs are located in regional universities such as K-State because they do not focus on corporate clientele, but rather more on an individual level.

Boisseau, along with Angie Herbers, senior in family financial planning, and Nicole Meyer, junior in family financial planning, will travel to New York for the American Express Competition from April 6-9.

Herbers said the financial planning major requires students to be very flexible in regards to a client's needs.

"To major in financial planning, you must be able to convince your client that what you suggest is right," Herbers said. "You have to know and explain the psychology behind investing to your client."

All three members of the team said a course in personal and family finance should be required for all majors.

Starting pitcher Jason Wells earned his first win of the season Tuesday night after pitching a complete game against Niagra. Wells recorded 10 strikeouts while allowing two walks and three earned runs in the Wildcats' 7-3 victory. Wells is now 1-5 on the season.

PATIENT PERFORMANCE

Cats defeat Niagra University 7-3 Tuesday, committing no errors

K-State players Scott Tallman (left) and Lucas Pfannenstiel keep score Tuesday night in the game against Niagra University. The Wildcats defeated the Purple Eagles 7-3.

K-State pitcher Jason Wells had his best start of the year Tuesday in the Cats' (8-16) 7-3 victory against Niagra University (8-6).

Wells struck out 10 batters and walked two in nine innings on the night. His dominating performance earned him his first win of the year. "I was throwing more strikes tonight and staying ahead of the hitters," Wells said. "That's the key to pitching, and I've been falling behind guys all season long, and it's been killing me."

K-State head coach Mike Clark said he hoped the outing would get Wells back on track.

"He threw very well tonight. He got ahead in the count all night long," Clark said. "We wanted to get him an outing like this so that he can get back in gear. He's been a little passive, and tonight he went out and threw pitches in the zone and mixed them well. He did a nice job."

K-State fell behind 3-0 after 3 1/2 innings, but the Cats struck back in the bottom half of the fourth.

The Wildcats' first two batters got on in the fourth inning, and one run scored after a pair of sacrifices by Mark English and Benton Oleen.

Travis Andre' drew a walk and two runs scored when Chris Nelson doubled into deep center field. The Cats put up one more run during the inning and gave Wells a 4-3 lead heading into the fifth.

"I thought we competed better the last six innings, and we did a lot better job up at the plate than we did the first three," Clark said.

Wells and the Cats' defense controlled the rest of the game. The Cats committed no errors during the contest, and Wells only allowed three base runners after the fourth inning.

K-State added one run during the sixth, seventh and eighth innings.

"We're coming along," Clark said. "We've still got a ways to go, and there are some things we need to work on, but there were some bright spots offensively."

Throughout the game, the Cats saturated the base paths with runners. K-State had a runner on base every inning and put a total of 25 men on base.

"We're working on our patience, and we're working on hitting the ball to the opposite field," Clark said. "Today we did a good job with the patience, but we're still in key situations trying to pull pitches that we shouldn't. We're way out in front of change-ups and curve balls."

The Cats stranded 15 men during the course of the game and left the bases loaded in the fourth and seventh innings.

"We've got to start hitting it to the opposite field," Clark said. "What's happening is we're getting runners in scoring position. We're getting runners on base — we're just not doing a good job of hitting pitches once we get runners in scoring position."

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Spring break in Texas featured both the good and the bad for the K-State Women's rowing team.

The first event of the Texas trip was the Heart of Texas Regatta in Austin on March 19. In this competition, the novice boats led the way for the Cats.

The Novice 8 placed first in the 1,000 meter race by defeating Southern Methodist University and four other teams by more than a second in the final with a time of 3:54.4. The Novice 4 finished third in its final after rowing a time of 4:47.7.

The novice boats' fast times are a result of both talent and training techniques, K-State head coach Jenny Hale said.

"They have very strong fundamentals," Hale said. "We have also integrated them with the varsity a little more this year, so they have been challenged more early on."

In contrast to the novice boats' success, the varsity teams struggled. Both the First Varsity 8 and the Second Varsity 8 could not find their rhythm to start the race and as a result, they failed to make the finals.

"They didn't find their tempo," Hale said. "We refer to it as spinning their wheels. We just need more water time to work on it."

The varsity teams, featuring new line-ups, showed much improvement a week later, however, in Tulsa, Okla. In the dual against the University of Tulsa, the Second Varsity 8 won its race, and its 5:17.1 time was the fastest of the meet. In the second race, the First Varsity 8 beat Tulsa with a time of 5:19.3.

Even though the varsity teams raced better than the previous outing, they can still improve, Hale said.

"The new line-ups are working better without a doubt," Hale said. "They lost their rhythm in the third 500 meters, but they found it quicker and kept it longer than last time."

The Novice 8 finished third with a time of 5:24.3.

Between the Regatta and Tulsa competitions, the team remained in Carpenter leads women's golf team

By DEREK BOSS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They call her the prankster on the team.

"I like to have fun and be able to relax a little bit," freshman Elise Carpenter said. "A good atmosphere is important when we're traveling a lot and missing a lot of school."

"At some point, you've just got to have fun and relax."

However, despite her lighthearted personality and sense of humor, Carpenter's golf game has been speaking loud and clear this spring.

"My entire game is finally coming together," she said. "I've just been patient and keep believing I'm going to do well."

It has paid off.

She leads the Wildcats this year with two top-10 finishes in three tournaments and a scoring average of 77.9 in 10 rounds of play.

"It's always nice when freshmen come in and make an impact," women's golf coach Kristen Knight said. "I've been very pleased. She's made a big improvement from her fall semester to this semester."

During the fall 1999 season, Carpenter's best finish was a tie for 15th at the Big 12 Preview on Sept. 13-14 in Lincoln, Neb. Already this spring, she has equaled or bettered that mark in just four tournaments.

Carpenter started the season with a tie for 10th at the Mountain View Collegiate on Feb. 19-20 in Tucson, Ariz. She fired two rounds of 76, one stroke above her low round of the fall.

She followed that by tying for eighth at the Edwina Watts-Carolinas Collegiate Classic on Feb. 28-29 in Pinehurst, N.C. There, Carpenter shot a first-round 75 en route to a career-best finish and a tie for eighth.

On March 6-7, she recorded a career-best with a first-round 72 at the GTE Mo'Morial in Houston. However, her numbers faded in the next two rounds, and she finished 15th.

Most recently, Carpenter finished 28th at the Betsy Rawls Longhorn Classic from March 17 to 19 in Austin, Texas. She led the Unknown teams dash columnist's hopes for NCAA tournament finals

OK, kids, we're getting interactive this morning. Raise your hand if your NCAA Tournament bracket is in utter, smoking ruin heading into the Final Four this weekend. Yep, that's what I thought.

RICHARD SMITH

Unanimous. Once again, the field of 64 has made a mockery of would-be experts everywhere. March Madness is living entirely up to its name this year. The most important games in college basketball this year will be played by the biggest collection of unknowns this side of the cast of "Slam Dunk Ernest." Duke? Gone. Arizona? Canned. Stanford? Bounced. Cincinnati? Fractured. Temple? Exposed. St. John's? Toasted. Ohio State? Scooned. I could go on like this (It's surprisingly fun), but I trust I've made my point. Of the top 12 seeds in the tournament, a whopping three made it into the Elite Eight: Oklahoma State, Iowa State and Michigan State.

Of those three, only No. 1-seeded Michigan State has made it to the final weekend of hoop action. Rounding out the quartet are No. 5-seeded Florida, No. 8-seeded North Carolina, and No. 8-seeded Wisconsin, as motley a crew as there probably has been in NCAA history. The participants have more losses and a higher combined seeding than ever before.

To the uninitiated fan, the initiated fan, heck, maybe even to their own coaches, these teams are relative unknowns. So now, into the breach I come, ready to organize the chaos and predict for you the eventual victor of the NCAA basketball tournament.

Now, I readily admit that Malaysian yak herders know more about basketball than I do, but that's the beauty of this. I might just be the right guy to make sense of this illogical mess. Here's a quick (and arbitrary) rundown on how the combatants stack up to each other in several integral areas:

DID I PICK THEM TO WIN AT ALL? (GUARANTEED DOOM)

Michigan State: Yes
Florida: No
North Carolina: No
Wisconsin: No
Edge: Everyone but the Spartans

Well, thanks to my less-than-scientific ranking system, it looks like the Gators and Badgers are the favorites. The logical favorite is Michigan State, but I picked them to win it all, which is the kiss of death. I'm bad luck for teams. Just ask the Chiefs. Besides, if nothing else, this tournament has proved that logic left the building back in the first round.

Look for Wisconsin to beat Michigan State in a defensive affair, 50-49, on a last-second bucket by Duany Duany. Meanwhile, look for Florida to out-everything North Carolina, 74-60. In the final, Wisconsin will be game, but Florida will be just too much for them, 67-62. But don't be surprised if something completely unexpected happens this weekend. It tends to happen with these things.

Texas for training. In addition to the added time away from home, Texas also features superior water conditions, Hale said.

"Texas provides constant good water training," Hale said. "It's a change of tempo, and you can always count on good, solid water."

The Cats next will be in action Friday in Iowa City in a round-robin competition against Iowa and Tennessee. The competition will be tough, but Iowa specifically poses a good challenge, Hale said.

"They have a strong crew," Hale said. "They have a lot of juniors and seniors that were successful as freshmen. We need to stay focused. We're stone-stepping from week to week to work on getting faster."

squad in the first and third days of the tourney, shooting 78 each day to spark K-State's 11th-place team finish.

Despite Carpentier's being a freshman, Knight said she has shown substantial signs of her potential.

"This spring, her ball-striking has been pretty good, and she's becoming more confident about being in the U.S. and being in college," Knight said. "There's an adjustment period for all freshmen."

Carpentier, a native of Pont-Rouge, Quebec, came to the Cats as one of the top Canadian players. She finished 13th at the Canadian Junior Championship and was ranked 11th in Canada and 14th at the international level.

However, despite her impressive numbers on paper, Knight said Carpentier provides more than a solid golf game for K-State.

"She has impacted the team, not only with her game on the golf course, but by her practice habits and her attitude," Knight said. "She's not only a good player — she's a good person."

"On the golf course, her concern is golf. She doesn't let anything bother her, and she controls her emotions very well. She's very dedicated and is always looking to improve her game."

Knight said Carpentier's constant desire to elevate her play has impressed her as a coach.

"She's really good about evaluating her round and knowing where she needs to improve," Knight said. "That's one of her strengths, she's very motivated from a coach's standpoint."

Carpentier said she always has strived to play better golf, and the collegiate level is no exception.

"Before coming here, there were some objectives I wanted to attain — and some I haven't reached yet," she said. "As a freshman, I know that I can do well, but there's always room for improvement."

"I'm trying to improve my golf, which is the first reason I'm playing at K-State. The first reason that I'm here is to play golf — and to play great golf. I want to reach my objectives, work hard, and keep believing in myself."

Carpentier said she believes she can accomplish all those things as a Wildcat. Carpentier said K-State is the perfect program for her, giving her an opportunity to play collegiate golf as well as pursue a degree in golf-course management.

With Carpentier and two other talented freshmen, Morgan Hagler and Miranda Smith, as well as three developing sophomores, Knight said she believes the K-State women's golf program is on the upswing from previous years.

"I think this is the deepest we've been in talent in my time at Kansas State," Knight said. "I think that's exciting for the program. The nucleus of the team is young, and it's going to be an exciting future — not only for Elise, but for the rest of the team as well."

Carpentier, too, said she's excited about the future of K-State golf.

"We're all great players, and we still have a couple of years in front of us," she said. "Golf is a game that you can't force stuff to happen. You have to wait and be patient. And, it will pay off for us in a couple of years."

LAW SUIT

"The plaintiff, IntelliSports, is considering an appeal as to the proper level of damages to be imposed," he said. "IntelliSports feels strongly that the evidence in trial demonstrated that the damages to date were far in excess of $100,000."

Fitzgerald said he was satisfied with the outcome of the case.

"We respect the court's decision, and we admit to making mistakes in the process of starting our magazine," he said. "We're quite relieved that the future for Powercat Illustrated is very bright, based on the court's decision. We should be around for years to come."

Fitzgerald served as Purple Pride editor from 1995 to '98 before leaving to start his own K-State fan magazine. The lawsuit arose from numerous accusations, including that Fitzgerald had used information and resources belonging to Purple Pride to help prepare for the start-up of Powercat Illustrated, and that he had tried to lure away Purple Pride sponsors.

Fitzgerald was found not liable for charges of tortious interference with a contract (luring away sponsors) or fraud, but he was found liable for breach of fiduciary duty (planning his new venture while still employed by IntelliSports) and misappropriation of trade secrets (use of Purple Pride subscriber information). A fifth count was thrown out during the trial.

Fitzgerald said he and his company had admitted readily to the counts for which they were found liable.

"I started the magazine (Powercat Illustrated) while still employed by them," Fitzgerald said. "From this trial on, we never denied that. That was never a question."

"In hindsight, if I had to do it over again, I would have left their employment in the middle of a printing year and left them without an editor in the middle of a print cycle. But I felt I owed it to K-Staters to get them through a publishing year, so I did both," he said.

Appeals notwithstanding, Fitzgerald said last week's ruling will allow Powercat Illustrated to resume nurturing the business, which has grown to 4,850 subscribers since its inception.

"This clarifies our future very well," he said. "As long as we keep doing a good job in the marketplace, there will continue to be a magazine."

including education programs, housing and community development.

State and local governments use the information to plan and allocate money to school construction, public buildings and public transportation systems.

Parks said Manhattan stands in a better position to obtain entitlement status than it did in 1990, and that in the long run it benefits Manhattan to obtain this status.

"It is growing and has great future ahead," he said.

Parks said if someone doesn't fill out the federal census, it short-changes the community.

"If they don't fill it out, they won't be identified," he said. "The snapshot of what we are today will be the basis for what we will be looked at for the next 10 years."

Mike Brassel, project manager for census adjustment for the Secretary of State's office, also said college students should not worry about their parents marking them on their federal forms. On the form, it specifically states that parents should not mark their children who are away at school as part of their household.

Parks said the deadline to return the forms is April 15 but there is a little wriggle room. His office will continue taking forms until the later part of April. Census takers will be sent out April 27 to households that have not returned the form.

Fourie also said it is important to note that all information obtained in the census is confidential.

"I think the two things that may cause concern is one, whether they already fill out the form, and the other is whether the information they are providing is going to be treated as confidential."

highly visible disabilities such as the inability to walk, but not for invisible ones like asthma.

Outgoing K-State Student Body President Jason Heinrich said he had been thinking of an anti-smoking proposal since the Culligan Holiday Bowl in December. By February, Heinrich and 20 other authors had drafted a resolution supporting the ordinance, and it was adopted by Student Senate.

Jake Worcester, who will take up the presidency in April, said he would continue to support Heinrich's efforts not to go against smokers, but to protect non-smokers.

"As I've talked to students, I've found overwhelming support for a clean-air ordinance," he said.

The outgoing student body vice president, Gabe Eckert, said the issue has been brought to student government by constituents.

"When we speak, it's not three people speaking. It's the voice of Student Governing Association," he said.

The recent unrelated decision by K-State residence halls to go smokeless shows the same trend, Eckert said.

"I think that speaks volumes for the student support on this initiative," he said.

Others, business owners in particular, said the idea has flaws. Russ Loub, owner and operator of Little Apple Brewery, said owners were not approached on the ordinance.

"I think bar and restaurant owners, because they've been left out of this loop, feel a little defensive, and I think rightly so," he said.

It's easy to say smoking regulation has no negative effects on business, he said, when one's livelihood and family's livelihood isn't depending upon it.

Rich Markle, one of the owners and operators of Rock-A-Belly Deli, said the proposed ordinance, which doesn't apply to private clubs and groups bars and restaurants together, isn't fair. Markle also said Eckert's comparison to no smoking in residence halls, where students live, vs. bars, where they go by choice, isn't accurate.

"I think that's apples and oranges," he said.

Markle said Rock-A-Belly was considering going smoke-free anyway, but he preferred to make the decision himself instead of being forced to by government.

Rick Wooten, senior in broadcasting and bartender at Aggie Lounge, said his bar, 40 feet long and 10 feet wide, would have a simple problem with a non-smoking section.

"Where would you put a wall in?" he said, adding that the business's only option would be to expand into the alley.

In addition, he said, Heinrich, Eckert and Worcester's support might not be the majority, when only 15 to 20 percent of K-State students voted.

"So don't take the word of the Student Governing Association as the true word of K-State," he said.

As the session drew to a close, each of the five commissioners said he or she would support an ordinance but remained wary of how it would be worded in fairness. The final decision was to authorize city staff to research the issue and discuss findings at a later planning session.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said the government has every right to regulate cigarette smoke, a Class A carcinogen, but said he was unsure how to deal with businesses physically or financially unable to comply.

Commissioner Karen McCulloh said she agreed with a previous speaker that the movement towards anti-smoking businesses is inevitable, but would like to see the issue on a ballot on August.

Commissioner Carol Peak said she supports an ordinance but expensive building modifications are unreasonable.

Mayor Roger Reitz said that as a doctor, he is opposed to smoking on principle, but to push the ordinance full-force upon businesses is unfair.

Commissioner Ed Klimek expressed thoughts similar to the other four, with confusion over how the issue pits large businesses against small and rights of smokers vs. nonsmokers.

Right: Heather Eaton, junior in theater, plays the role of Cynthia in a story about the need for love. "The Maiden's Prayer" opens at 8 p.m. Thursday at the Purple Masque Theatre in East Stadium. Below: Amy Verdon, senior in theater, performs as Libby in "The Maiden's Prayer." Tickets are available at the McCain Box Office.

Yearning for LOVE

STORY BY REED DUNN ■ PHOTOS BY KELLY GLASSCOCK

Graduate student to direct play concerning love, relationships

It's a story about love and the need for love.

Doug Hurley, graduate student in theater, said "The Maiden's Prayer" by Nicky Silver is just the play he wanted to direct for his graduate-student project.

"A friend of mine gave me the script, and it had everything I wanted," Hurley said. "There's a lot of stuff going on. The synopsis of the script almost reads as a soap opera."

"The Maiden's Prayer" will open at 8 p.m. Thursday at the Purple Masque Theatre in East Stadium and will play through Saturday.

The story begins at a wedding, and throughout the script, the lives and loves of the play's five characters unfold.

Garrett Gottschalk, sophomore in theater, plays the part of Andrew. He said the play is a modern, well-written script to which the audience will be able to relate.

"It is modern, but people are going to understand it," he said.

"These are themes people are going to understand. These characters are people, real people."

Hurley said he cast the play knowing the actors would work well together. Four of the five students cast in the play worked together in the recent KSU Theatre production "Picasso at the Lapin Agile."

"They're all good at letting themselves open up to their parts. They give and take from each other," he said. "The actors are good because of all the little things. The way they flick their cigarettes and the way they cover things just makes it real."

Even though the actors previously have worked together, Tyler Lansdown, senior in theater, said the play will be different from anything they have done.

"It's different every time, because every character you play has a different relationship with everyone else," Lansdown said. "We give each other things. We're such a close group of friends, and we want to help each other."

Ben Hensley, senior in theater, said he was drawn to the character Paul when he first saw the script of "The Maiden's Prayer."

"When I first read it, I was intrigued with the character of Paul," Hensley said. "He has a problem with honesty, and I think everyone I have met has a problem with honesty."

The hardest part of the script is working with the dialogue, Hensley said.

"The dialogue is really quick, but it's how people talk," he said. "It has a real rapid-pace line delivery."

Amy Verdon, fifth-year senior in theater and vocal music, will play Libby. Verdon said the story will provide a feeling of realism for the audience.

"When you come to this play, if you can identify an experience you've had with an experience the characters have, it makes it more realistic," she said. "I think there are a lot of things people can see and learn about themselves."

"We see a lot about love. Seeing people not for who they are, but who they want to be."

ticket info

Tickets for "The Maiden's Prayer" are $3 for students and $5 for the general public. They are available at the McCain Box Office.

Cosmetics provide employment for students

BY SARAH MCCAFFREY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Today's Avon ladies and Mary Kay beauty consultants are breaking the stereotypes of door-to-door cosmetics salespeople.

"You don't have to be a glamorous person to sell Mary Kay," said Amanda Burkhardt, senior in finance and a Mary Kay beauty consultant for three years. "You have to have the motivation to want something more. Selling skills are taught through training classes."

A growing number of college students are choosing to sell products such as Mary Kay and Avon because of the benefits they offer.

Many students find selling the products convenient because it fits easily into any schedule.

April King, freshman in kinesiology, began selling Mary Kay products because of the convenience factor.

"It's a great opportunity, because it's very flexible and good money," she said.

King said she gets to keep half the money she makes from the products she sells as a Mary Kay beauty consultant.

Another advantage to selling products is getting to know more people in the community.

"It's also an outlet to get to meet new people," said Burkhardt.

One drawback to selling the products is the temptation to purchase the products with the profits earned from sales.

"I always bought a lot. Most of my profits went to what I bought. That's the bad thing about selling it," said Normaris Rodriguez, freshman in pre-medicine and Spanish.

Rodriguez sold Avon products for two years after taking over her mother's clientele.

Another advantage the sales offer over a traditional 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. job is the ability to be one's own boss. Students can decide the amount of time and effort they want to invest in the endeavor.

"I can do what I want and don't have to answer to anyone," King said.

Burkhardt said sellers will profit based on the amount of effort in selling their product.

Although being one's own boss provides much freedom, it also mandates responsibility. One situation with which students must deal on their own is difficult clients.

"Sometimes, it was aggravating when people ordered products and wouldn't take it," Rodriguez said. "Then you had to hassle with returns."

Despite the small hassles, product selling is a job that appeals to college students.

"I would probably do it if I had the time," Jessica Ollenburger, freshman in elementary education, said.

Ollenburger said the prospect of selling a product line such as Mary Kay appealed to her because she would get as much out of it as she decided to invest in it.

The audiences these sellers target often start with their friends. Rodriguez took over her mother's clientele and branched out to reach her friends and neighbors. Some sellers throw makeover parties, and others employ tactics such as brochures placed at work sites or in mail boxes, or simply relying on word of mouth.

Burkhardt said there is a huge market for Mary Kay products in the Manhattan area. She said she gets some of her clientele from people she talks to in class, but also tries to maintain a balance between students and people from the community.

Although she has been selling Mary Kay products for only a short period of time, King said she thinks the products she is selling will appeal to the college crowd.

"If students tried it, they would like it," she said.

"The prices are very good. It's cheaper and better quality than Clinique and Lancome."

Burkhardt said her experiences selling Mary Kay have been positive, and she encourages others to get involved.

"How many people can say they love a part-time job after doing it for three years?" she said.

Killing of N.Y. teen-ager justified

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HIAWATHA, Kan. — Law enforcement officers were justified in fatally shooting a Buffalo, N.Y., teen-ager who was suspected of killing a sheriff's deputy March 1, a county prosecutor has concluded.

In a report issued Friday, Brown County Prosecutor Kevin Hill said 16-year-old Vincent Smith had threatened to kill the officers who had tracked him to a ditch with the help of a dog.

"The suspect continued to yell at officers from the moment the dog found him by screaming, 'I'll shoot you,' 'I'm going to kill you' numerous times," Hill said in the report.

Hill's report said three law enforcement officers were justified in using force against Smith because they had to defend themselves against the teen-ager's use of unlawful force.

Hill based his opinion on reports from the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, the Brown County Sheriff's Department and other law enforcement agencies involved in searching for the young runaway who inexplicably shot and killed Brown County Sheriff's Deputy Todd Widman.

Smith, the son of Buffalo police Lt. Thomas Smith, had left his northern New York home with the family car and his father's handgun Feb. 29. Smith ended his mysterious journey in Hiawatha, where Widman found him and was about to take him in for questioning when the deputy was shot.

After the shooting, numerous law enforcement agencies began searching for the suspect. Smith was involved in two gun battles with authorities that night before being shot and killed in a field west of town.

The report said Smith threatened to shoot two Kansas Highway Patrol troopers and a Nemaha County Sheriff's deputy who had tracked him to a ditch.

Trooper Kyle L. Moomau continually yelled at Smith, asking him to show his hands and give up, according to the report.

When Smith was spotted about 10 feet away, he was seen holding a handgun with the muzzle swinging Sgt. Moomau's way, the report said.

Moomau then fired once at the suspect, sending the teen back-

Bill offers more insurance options

By TIM RICHARDSON

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A Senate bill would give poor families more options in choosing health-insurance coverage by creating a partnership between the state and businesses.

The bill is designed to help employees of small businesses. It would offer workers at small businesses many of the same options available to employees of larger businesses.

The Senate Financial Institutions and Insurance Committee heard testimony Tuesday about establishing a health partnership. It would combine federal and state subsidies with contributions from employees and employers.

The bill doesn't spell out how much the state would contribute, however.

The money would go to purchase health insurance for workers whose wages do not exceed 200 percent of the poverty level, or $16,700. The bill sets up a program in line with federal standards.

Sen. Don Steffes, R-McPherson and the committee's chairman, said the bill would bring more alternatives to many Kansas families.

"I think one of the major problems facing this nation is trying to provide insurance for low-income families," he said.

Steffes said the limited number of days remaining in the legislative session could be an obstacle to passing the bill. Tuesday's hearing — the bill's first — came on the 79th calendar day of the session, out of 90 scheduled.

"At this stage in the game, everything is up in the air," Steffes said.

The health partnership would be set up by a new Kansas Business Health Policy Committee, a non-profit corporation. It would develop two or more health plans and provide health insurance through multiple insurance companies to small businesses and their employees.

Bob Corkins, executive director of the Kansas Public Policy Institute, said although he supports the bill, it should be less restrictive. The institute is a group that provides research on free-market policies.

"It should be broadened to allow all Kansans to participate," he said.

Nicholls to stay as arts, sciences dean

By TANNER EHMKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 100 candidates applied to be the new president of Northern Illinois University.

Peter Nicholls, dean of arts and sciences, was honored to be selected as one of the final four candidates for the position.

Although Nicholls wasn't selected, he is pleased to continue to serve K-State.

"I'm extremely happy here," Nicholls said. "I really do appreciate the people here at K-State."

That's what makes K-State special."

The interviewing process was intensive, Nicholls said. Two days were spent interviewing with the NIU Board of Trustees and meeting with the staff, students and alumni. It was a long and very thorough process, he said.

"It was quite wearing, but it was a valuable experience," he said. "I learned what a presidential interview is like."

Prior to accepting the position of dean of arts and sciences at K-State in 1991, Nicholls had simply exploring another opportunity.

He enjoys it here at K-State very much, but applied for a better served 20 years at NIU on the faculty as a professor in the math department and as assistant dean of arts and sciences.

Dennis Wilson, assistant dean of arts and sciences, said Nicholls was position because of his extraordinary abilities, Wilson said.

"He's taking it pretty good. He was disappointed," Wilson said. "I expressed to him I was disappointed as well. But we're glad he's still going to be here with us."

Chad Conley, former president of the arts and sciences ambassadors, said K-State is fortunate that Nicholls is not leaving.

Nicholls always has been in support of the programs that the arts and sciences ambassadors do, Conley said. The program was expanding and was undergoing many changes.

Nicholls helped guide the ambassador program into the new format of the program.

"It's sad that he didn't get the position. He's more than qualified for the position," said Conley, senior in psychology, Spanish and pre-law. "But it's good for K-State that he's going to stay."

Nicholls lost the nomination to John G. Peters of Tennessee.

Peters, provost and chief operating officer at the University of Tennessee, will succeed John E. La Tourette as the next chief executive of NIU.

La Tourette served 14 years as president and will retire to Prescott, Ariz., with his family. Peters is expected to earn $215,000 annually.

Peter Sherwood, head of the Department of Chemistry, said Nicholls would not have been nominated had it not been for his accomplishments at K-State.

"I'm delighted he's staying. He's an excellent dean," Sherwood said. "I'm sure the college will continue to progress as long as he is dean."

Football ticket prices increase from 1999

By JAMIE BARRETT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Football tickets are available for students to purchase through KATS but for a higher price than last year.

Tickets were available to students during the 1999 season for $98 dollars, but there has been a slight increase in price to $100 for the 2000 season.

Carol Adolph, athletic ticket manager, said the ticket prices have not been raised too steeply for students, but there has been a larger change in public ticket prices.

"A bench season ticket for the public will cost $228 this year, whereas last year it only cost $197," Adolph said.

Adolph said the increase in prices has caused them to increase the ticket prices for conference games and premier games as well. Tickets for conference games have been raised from $31 to $35, and tickets to the two premier games scheduled against the University of Oklahoma and the University of Nebraska are $40.

"We had to make an increase across the board," Adolph said.

Bob Cavello, director of athletic business operations, said the increase in ticket prices was made foremost because of the quality of the product.

"We have an elite team, playing in a premier conference and that is the basis of debating price," Cavello said.

Cavello said the decision to increase ticket prices is not taken lightly and has to go through several levels of approval.

"We involve the students in all of our decisions because it is their football team," Cavello said. "We think the prices we have decided on are fair and comparable with some of our sister institutions."

Max Urlick, athletic director, said there are many factors in deciding whether to raise the price of tickets and also to what they should be raised.

"We have to look at the cost increase and where we are in the marketplace with other schools, and also we have to look at the financial need," Urlick said.

Although there has been an

Kansas alone adjusts its federal census numbers

By KELLE MILLER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas is the only state that adjusts its federal census numbers, and Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said this process hurts towns such as Manhattan that have a large student population.

does this crazy adjustment is Kansas," she said.

Oleen said the state adjustment gives the state the ability to subtract military and students from certain areas, which hurts Riley County because of the population of Fort Riley and K-State.

"The irony of it is that it counts people that are in prison," she said.

"That's nuts."

The State of Kansas Census Adjustment Questionnaire asks students to decide which they consider their permanent residence — Manhattan or their hometown. The state then uses these forms to adjust the federal census numbers to determine state legislative districts.

Oleen is the author of an amendment that would have ended the adjustment of the federal census figures but failed last year.

It passed the Senate and received a majority in the House, but did not receive the two-thirds vote required to change a constitutional amendment.

She said there are some state legislators who object to students from their districts being counted elsewhere.

"Now we have to live with it," she said.

Scott Jones, K-State's assistant dean of student life, said he could understand how legislators could be wary of students from their district being counted elsewhere, but he said this readjustment is a complicated issue and costs the state a lot of money.

Jones said that for Riley County to have maximum repre-

Bob Woodward, author and journalist for The Washington Post, points to a member of the audience during a question-and-answer section of the 117th Landon Lecture on Wednesday morning in McCain Auditorium. Woodward discussed President Clinton, presidential elections and the news media.

HONEST COMMUNICATION

Watergate journalist addresses politics, journalism during Landon Lecture

Bob Woodward stepped to the Landon Lecture podium Wednesday morning with a different type of speech in mind.

The Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and assistant Washington Post editor addressed a McCain Auditorium audience for the 117th lecture in the Landon Lecture Series, which he called the first interactive Landon Lecture to take place at K-State. The structure of the speech involved the opinions of the crowd regarding four main questions.

"If this lecture had a title, I would call it 'What do you think?,' or 'Honest Communication,'" Woodward said.

The importance of establishing channels of honest communication was the main theme of the lecture, as Woodward turned the reins of his talk to his audience.

In the first of Woodward's questions, he asked why President Clinton could be referred to as a successful politician. Woodward first called on Bill Graves, seated in the third row from the stage, for his thoughts.

While Graves called Clinton brilliant for the way he handled the crises during his time in the White House, Woodward said his verdict came from an interview with the president in the Oval Office.

"He uses perfect, unrelenting eye contact. He's trained himself to focus on people," Woodward said.

Woodward said Clinton's demeanor was a product of years of commitment to his dream of becoming president of the United States.

"He was willing to do anything, to commit anything, to that task," he said.

The failure to remove Clinton from office during the Senate trial was Woodward's second audience-directed question. Crowd members stated the unity of the Democratic party was a main reason for Clinton's continued time as president; Woodward said it was an inability on Special Prosecutor Kenneth Starr's part.

"There was no evidence that Clinton committed a crime," Woodward said. "There was no suggestions of an obstruction of justice."

Woodward referred to the Watergate scandal as background music to the Monica Lewinsky affair and Clinton impeachment, an event that will govern forever the way the U.S. legal system will handle presidents.

When the audience was asked who will or should be elected the next U.S. president, Graves again was asked for his thoughts. Graves said he would support George W. Bush in November's election.

While Woodward never revealed which way he would cast his vote, he did say certain trends emerged during campaign 2000.

"The insurgencies of John McCain and Bill Bradley suggested there is a certain willingness to reform or take risks, to do something new," Woodward said.

Past campaigns by presidential hopefuls such as Ross Perot and Colin Powell lent to this new public opinion, Woodward said. However, he also said the preservationist voting trend will prevail in the end, with voters returning to the usual candidates come November.

"The one who is going to win is not going to be the one that convinces the public he is a reformer," Woodward said.

In Woodward's last question, the audience was asked why the American people generally dislike and distrust the news media.

Journalists were referred to as sensationalist and shallow by some, and Woodward, in part, agreed.

"They can be concerned with the quick and the glib, and not spending enough time getting to the bottom of things," he said.

Broadcast media can be especially guilty of this due to quick turn-around time for news, Woodward said.

"Television is a deadly communication medium," he said. "The English language is sometimes like a golf ball — it never goes in a straight line."

A writer from the Manhattan High School newspaper was on hand for the lecture, prompting Woodward to give advice for student journalists.

"You have to realize that, when you

Poll results. Americans increasingly are pleased with the Clinton administration's dealings with China, but support for the Kosovo operation has slipped, according to a national poll.

Despite China's recent threats against Taiwan, the poll by the Pew Research Center shows a softening of criticism of the administration's stance on China, where issues have ranged from trade to human rights. In the poll, 42 percent of respondents said Clinton's dealings are about right, compared to 35 percent nine months ago.

Smokers' lawyers request millions in tobacco lawsuit

MIAMI — The nation's five biggest tobacco companies should pay three cancer-stricken smokers $14.4 million for lying to them and the rest of the American public about their sickening and addictive product, the smokers' attorney told jurors Wednesday.

"Let them now reap the consequences for the harm they have caused good, decent people," attorney Stanley Rosenblatt said of the industry, although he noted, "It seems crass almost to put a price tag" on it.

Lead tobacco attorney Dan Webb opened the industry's response by promising what he called reality checks about Rosenblatt's arguments over three days.

"You've only heard half the story," Webb said.

The six-member jury is being asked to order compensatory damages for the three ailing smokers who represent an estimated 500,000 other Florida smokers in the first class-action case against the tobacco industry to go to trial.

If jurors award compensatory damages, they then will be asked to set a dollar figure to punish the industry. Company officials fear a potentially ruinous $300 billion punitive damage verdict.

The six-member jury decided last July that the industry fraudulently conspired to make a defective product.

Doctors have testified that the three smokers' cancers were caused by smoking.

The industry has offered evidence that bronchioalveolar cancer — a form of lung cancer that the jury decided is not linked to smoking — caused the cancers in two of the smokers.

It blamed industrial wood dust as a possible cause of the throat cancer in the third.

The defendants are Philip Morris Inc., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., Lorillard Tobacco Co., Liggett Group Inc. and the industry's Council for Tobacco Research and Tobacco Institute.

Georgia mobile-home fire kills 8 Wednesday morning

ACWORTH, Ga. — A fast-moving fire engulfed a four-bedroom mobile home early Wednesday, killing eight people, including an infant.

Linda Joanne Cochran, her four children, a niece, her teen-age son's girlfriend and the girlfriend's baby all died in the blaze that broke out around 3 a.m. 30 miles northwest of Atlanta. Officials said the double-wide mobile home did not have a working smoke detector.

Five of the bodies were found in a bedroom near the back door and three others were in the front of the mobile home, authorities said.

"It appears they were all trying to exit," said Mark Gresham, spokesman for the Cobb County Fire Department.

Neighbor Jim Wheeling said he tried to open windows to get to the victims, but all he could see inside were thick smoke and the red glow of flames.

"The back end was burning pretty good, and you could see the smoke coming out all around the trailer. I knew it was too late then," Wheeling said. "I just wish to God there was something else I could've done."

The fire started in or near a clothes dryer and probably smoldered in some clothes before it spread, said John Oxendine, the state insurance and fire commissioner.

When the flames did spread, they quickly engulfed the mobile home, which was fully ablaze when firefighters arrived at 3:15 a.m.

Identities of all the victims were not immediately available. Ed Converse, owner of mobile-home park, identified Cochran and gave her relationship to the other victims.

Converse said he wasn't surprised Cochran would have seven other people living with her.

"If there was a stray, she took them in — anyone, anything. She had a huge heart," he said.

Though Converse said his mobile homes are equipped with smoke detectors, Oxendine said either there was no smoke detector or, if there was one, it was not operational.

"Had there been a working smoke detector," he said, "they would have awakened and had plenty of time to get out."

Robert McCabe, an electrician with the Shelley Electric Company, goes over a set of floor plans in the Sunflower Room of the K-State Student Union on Wednesday. Cats' Pause Lounge will offer home-like setting in Union

By JOSS BRIGGS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

High-quality furniture, special lighting, French doors and finished wood trimming might seem fit for a king, but these luxuries soon will accommodate K-State students.

The Cats' Pause Lounge, a second floor study area in the K-State Student Union, should be completely renovated by the end of May, Marketing and Promotions Director Cindie Snyder said.

"It will be a special room for students," Snyder said. "Many people grew up in a home where there was one really fancy room. The new Cats' Pause will emulate that type of setting."

Students have used the room for studying since 1970. It was known for its egg-style chairs.

"The room will be very contemporary," Snyder said. "It will be different from any other study room on campus. There will be a variety of chairs and areas for students to study in a comfortable atmosphere."

A perpetual gas-log fireplace will complement the 1,960 square-foot room, Snyder said. The lounge will be comprised of dark plum and teal colors, cherry colored woods and wood tones and tile and carpeted flooring.

The upholstery, on display outside the room, mixes small and large patterns used on a combination of seating, including loveseats and lounge chairs in multiple seating groups. The "egg" chairs will carry the refurbished look.

Executive Director Bernard Pitts said it should be a place to get away, have a quiet read and be in a comfortable environment with friends.

Cats' Pause Lounge renovation began three weeks ago when the Union Bookstore moved back into its renovated ground-floor space. They had to wait until the bookstore was finished because they were using the Cats' Pause area for a temporary book store site.

Architect Ken Ebert has designed the room for more than one use. The Union will be able to shift furniture around and use the room for receptions and meetings.

As part of the Union's $11.5 million renovation project, the Cats' Pause Lounge is only one of a few projects that include the entire original recommendation by the enhancement group, Snyder said.

"When the enhancement group surveyed the needs of students, their original recommendations would have cost three times as much money as we allocated," Snyder said. "The Cats' Pause portion was left in its entirety without any price cuts being made. We feel that it's important to maintain an upscale 'living room on campus' area for students."

Police rescue man from suicide

By JOSS BRIGGS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A naked, suicidal man was saved south of Junction City on Wednesday, according to Geary County Sheriff Bill Deppish.

The sheriff's office received a report shortly after 5 p.m. that someone spotted men's clothes lying in the middle of River Road four miles south of town.

Upon further investigation, sheriff's deputies found an abandoned car on an unmaintained road just west of the clothes.

"We were able to do some checks through the license tag on the vehicle, and it appeared that we had somebody in the area that could do harm to himself," Deppish said.

A search including the sheriffs department and the Kansas Highway Patrol ensued.

"The suspect was spotted a couple of times running naked through a heavily wooded area along the Smokey Hill river," Deppish said. "Subsequently, our drug and search dog, Xena, was able to pick up the scent, followed the scent to the river bank, and there we discovered the suspect or, in this case, kind of, the patient."

Officials found the naked man in the river with his feet stuck several feet deep in mud.

"We estimated that he had jumped into the river as a suicide attempt," Deppish said. "He had been there approximately 15 minutes by the time we reached him."

Officials were able to use ropes and fish the streaker out of the river. He then was taken to Irwin Army Hospital for treatment of possible hypothermia, Deppish said.

"We believe if he had stayed in the river 10 more minutes, he would have died of hypothermia," Deppish said. "He is a Fort Riley soldier."

Deppish would not release the man's name, and law enforcement did not determine a motive for the man's actions.

"We do know he worked at a pizza facility in Junction City by the uniform he had on, but we don't know any other details," Deppish said.

The man is not subject to any judicial recourse for his actions.

"Suicide is not illegal in the state of Kansas," Deppish said. "I assume since he is Army, they will take jurisdiction and he can get some help."

Deppish said the situation was indeed a peculiar one. Committing suicide by freezing to death in the Smokey Hill river in spring is not something you see attempted every day, he said.

"It would not be the way someone would usually harm themselves because it would take some time," Deppish said.

3 killed, 80 injured by Texas tornadoes

By SHERRI CHUNN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WORTH, Texas — Cleanup crews sent huge dangling pieces of glass crashing to the pavement from Fort Worth's skyscrapers Wednesday as rescuers searched for more victims of tornadoes that ripped through the city, killing at least three people.

"We still feel there may be more victims trapped in the debris," Fire Chief Larry McMillan said.

Three people were killed, one was missing and presumed dead, more than 80 were injured and dozens were left homeless as two twisters blasted windows out of dozens of offices and tore homes apart shortly after the evening rush hour Tuesday.

"Imagine a large bomb going off," said Sean Finley, who hustled frantic customers down 35 floors to safety from his high-rise restaurant.

The twister stripped the brick walls off a cathedral tower as two women prayed inside.

"It looks like a battlefield and yet God brought us miraculously through," said the Rev. Bob Nichols as he surveyed the damage at Calvary Cathedral International.

About 30,000 people were left without power at the height of the storm, with 2,000 still out Wednesday afternoon, said TXU Corp. spokeswoman Pat Nichols.

Downtown Fort Worth, a city of 480,000 about 30 miles west of Dallas, was sealed off as crews pushed 200-pound panes of glass to the ground from 35 floors up.

Crews went floor by floor in downtown office buildings for a closer look at damage.

"You will have one building that looks almost unscathed, and next door to that you have a building that looks like it's downtown Beirut," said Lt. Gov. Rick Perry.

The search for bodies was centered on seven demolished buildings west of downtown Fort Worth, McMillan said.

Two people were crushed to death — one by a falling wall and the other by a truck trailer that flipped on him. Two others in a car were swept into the Trinity River near Arlington to the east. One body was recovered, and rescuers searched for the other victim.

The tornado that hit Arlington cut a path about two miles long and several blocks wide, destroying 93 houses, officials said. It next touched down in the Grand Prairie area about 10 miles to the east, destroying at least eight homes and damaging six.

"It's total devastation everywhere you look," Mike Anderson, a Salvation Army spokesman, said of one Arlington neighborhood of mostly two-story houses of around $200,000.

Many residents spent the night in their cars in their driveways rather than leave their damaged homes.

Gov. George W. Bush, campaigning in New Jersey, declared Tarrant County a disaster area.

"Last night's tornado damage was a tragic reminder of the fierce power of nature. My thoughts and prayers are with the victims and their families," he said.

Students should overlook ticket-price hike

K-State football is worth two more dollars.

Student season tickets will require an additional two bucks for the upcoming season — $100, compared to last season's $98. While the price is not welcome, it also is not too much with which to cope.

After students voted against helping to fund KSU Stadium expansion a few years ago, Athletic Director Max Urlick hinted that students would pay the price.

However, this never materialized.

While ticket prices will rise this year, they have not skyrocketed to astronomical levels, as some feared they might.

In fact, K-State students are getting a deal compared to some schools. Students at the University of Nebraska, for example, pay $130 for a season pass. Not only are they paying 30-percent more, but all tickets are assigned seats.

In reality, ticket costs are nearly identical to several Big 12 Conference rivals. University of Texas students pay $98 for a season pass. Texas A&M University students pay $97.50. While K-State students are shelling out a bit more, they are paying that money to see a program battling for national preeminence.

Lack of preeminence, however, can be a sign that a good deal might be in store. Students at the University of Kansas, where football has floundered lately, pay a mere $30 for season tickets. Students at Baylor University — which featured a paltry 0-8 record in conference play last season — need only show their student ID to gain admittance.

Certainly students are paying more than they would at some of these less-powerful football schools. But they are not being charged an outrageous price, either.

Urlick, so far, has treated students well, considering they refused to aid in the stadium expansion project.

Students should overlook the minimal price hike and continue their overwhelming support for the school's stellar football program.

Why wasn't there any voting on the engineering-technology fee hike? This isn't good news. The average engineering student probably takes at least three engineering classes each semester. That, at nine credit hours, and $14 per credit hour, comes to $126. I am a CIS major, and I pay these fees, and the most technology I am involved in is waiting for professors to reboot their overhead projectors after they crash.

Now that everybody is done bashing the basketball team, I would just like to let everyone know the baseball team sucks ass, too.

I would just like to thank the primaries for weeding out all of the good candidates. Now, I just have two really sorry choices.

Anyone who thinks religion is mutually exclusive with God, doesn't understand God.

I think we need to get rid of spring break. The only good it does is let your girlfriend go to some faraway place, meet some other guy that is better than you, fall in love with him and never want to talk to you again.

Why aren't you paying as much attention to baseball? They suck just as bad.

Why would I want to read relevant news? I can open up the Collegian, and there's everything I could ever want to know about charley horses.

Lessons learned with age can't be taught in text books

Lovie Haynes sits, soaking in the sunshine outside her decaying St. Louis home. Her glistening silver braids draw attention to her deeply lined, 70-year-old face. She looks peaceful.

Lovie was born in St. Louis in 1930. She loves the charm and memories she recalls of its streets.

St. Louis has changed drastically in the time she has called it home.

She tells me the block was prosperous and full of wealthy families years ago. Each magnificent home was cleaned daily by its numerous maids. Banquets and dinner parties were part of the active social life.

Life changes.

Original slate shingles now cling to the roof attached by weak nails. The maple woodwork carved by craftsmen is dry and cracks from age. Down the street from Lovie's, four brick homes are burned and boarded up. Trash lines the street as cars quickly pass through but never stop.

Lovie moved here with her husband in October 1962. The home still had some of its grandeur, but it was aging as quickly as the streets around it.

Lovie gave birth to 11 children, six boys and five girls. She raised them to go to church every Sunday and to help around the house. She says her family was full of love, and even though they didn't have much, they always had everything they needed.

Life changes.

When Lovie was 40, her husband suddenly died of a heart attack. Her only remaining son, Jon, is 50 years old and an alcoholic. Although physically alive, the alcohol has left him mentally dead.

ALICIA GOHEEN

Unable to care for himself, Lovie takes care of him. They live in her home on $700 a month. Some comes from Jon's Social Security checks, some from her husband's small pension. In the twilight of her years, when others should be caring for her, she cares for others.

The city has been abandoned. First, the people moved to the suburbs, then the businesses. The once-affordable houses have become decrepit and uninhabitable. The decay touched not only the homes, but also the people. Lovie says they are a desperate people.

Life changes.

Through the car window, the view looks dismal, but step into Lovie's home and you find a heart of pure gold. She is the epitome of living above your conditions, loving beyond what you think you can.

She doesn't have a college education, but in the time I spent with her, I learned more about life than any book I've ever read. My social and political ideas fell apart at her feet. My desires for a secure job and good pay became irrelevant when confronted by reality. I saw in Lovie what it means to love unconditionally. My prejudices were melted by her words.

Life changes.

Lovie said it was crazy that I had never eaten collard greens or ham hocks. She said it was crazy that I didn't know how to keep a philodendrum alive.

In my time at K-State, I have learned about macroeconomics, political science, literature and philosophy. Compared to most of the United States, my knowledge will put me far ahead in life.

But what do I know about life?

I know not what it is to sit up late at night with a son incapable of caring for himself, or what it means to lose a husband so early in life. I do not know what it is to give birth to 11 children, nor what it means to find enough to eat. I do not know the hardship that comes when you are discriminated against because of your skin.

Lovie has offered me more than the books and knowledge I am surrounded by here. She has lived a life harder than I could bear and thrived in her circumstances.

She is what the world views as needy and impoverished, but her wealth is far greater than can be measured.

KELIE FARRILL/Collegian

Despite increasing gas prices, Americans shouldn't gripe

How much of your vacation budget was apportioned to gasoline to get you to and from your spring break destination?

The price at the gas pump is up 50 percent since last year. The average national price at the pump is $1.60 a gallon, with highs at some parts of the country hovering around $2 a gallon. This is a result of foreign oil tripling in price per barrel to a high of $34.50 on March 8.

The other result of this has been one big national whine from a nation of oil addicts.

Let us put this in perspective. Per gallon, milk is $2.50, apple juice is $3.50, orange juice is $5.50 and fancy-ass bottled water is $6.80. When I buy beer at $1.50 a pint at the bars and think I'm getting a good deal, I'm paying $12 a gallon. I've seen people pay $2.50 for a shot of some sort of distilled beverage or another; that's $320 a gallon.

Around the world, gas prices are much worse. As of March 19, pump prices per gallon adjusted to U.S. dollars at some significant world cities were as follows: Mexico City

$2; Buenos Aires $4.56; Tokyo $4.50; Paris $4.34. The all-time high is London, where petrol is going for $5.28 a gallon; that's $52.80 for a 10-gallon fill-up. (If you want cheap gasoline, go to Baghdad. Gas is only 15 cents per gallon.)

Last year, when fuel was under a dollar a gallon at the pump, the United States was looking at the lowest gasoline prices (adjusted for inflation) ever, in the history of the world. Instead of being thankful for a period of time with absurdly low gas prices that helped our growing economy, we all bitch when costs rise to prices still lower than it was in most of the world's countries before the oil supply dropped, thus perpetuating the image around the world that the United States is populated by a bunch of spoiled wusses.

A series of coinciding occurrences led to the extra-cheap oil through the 1990s and the steep rise during the past month.

DAVID LEVIN

Through most of the 1990s, the 11 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries couldn't get their act together.

Complete lack of discipline and intramember antagonism, namely between Saudi Arabia and Iran, resulted with OPEC members refusing to adhere to their own production quotas. In addition, non-OPEC oil-producing countries — Norway, Mexico and Russia — just did what they wanted anyway.

Then, in 1997, the Asian economy crashed. Without this market buying oil, petroleum flooded the rest of the market, resulting in low prices and the near economic collapse of all the countries with an economic well-being mostly based on oil export.

It was inevitable that prices were to increase. No one with any sense could think otherwise. However, it appears that no one thought about it.

The rise of moderate governments in the Middle East reduced intraOPEC tension. The fear of near poverty (or at least great loss of revenue) introduced discipline within OPEC and new cooperation with the three significant non-OPEC countries. The recovery of the Asian market, along with everybody in this country buying sport-utility vehicles, increased demand for oil.

Oil supply drops, demand rises and, before you know it, we're paying $1.60 a gallon at the gas station.

Although the United States is using more oil than ever (i.e., everybody is driving SUVs), an ever-greater proportion of our economy is becoming more computer-technology based and thus less dependent on oil. This increase in oil prices isn't going to hurt us all that badly — only when we go fuel up our SUVs.

So what do we do? Politicians must look like they're doing something. However, most of what's been proposed is stupid (at least in a reality sense, maybe not in an election-year sense).

There's been a call to suspend the 1993 4.5-cent-per-gallon federal gas tax (or, as the Republicans like to call it, the "Gore tax" — is election-year politics at play, or what?). Because prices will rise to what the market will bear, pump prices will stay the same, with the oil companies pocketing the difference. As Charles Krauthammer, a columnist for The Washington Post, pointed out, this 4.5 cent per gallon tax cut "won't make a dime's worth of difference."

If gas gets to $2 per gallon, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott wants to eliminate the total federal gas tax of 18.3 cents per gallon. This might help a bit, but there won't be any money to fix the roads, but then again, who is going to be driving with gas at $2 per gallon?

Some want to release the oil in the strategic oil reserve stipulated to be used in only extreme emergencies. This will help for 56 days until it gets used up. The government can sell the oil now at $30 a barrel, buy it back later at $20 and make a profit. All we have to do is keep our fingers crossed that no crisis occurs in the meantime.

Then there was the Oil Reduction Act that would reduce or terminate arms sales to countries engaging in oil price fixing. Even the House GOP balked on that one last week when it realized that not selling arms to the Middle Eastern countries friendly to the United States probably would do more to destabilize the oil supply than to reduce prices.

The correct conservative thing to do is let market forces prevail. OPEC, fresh off the economic abyss, doesn't want to hear the United States (now in its greatest economic boom in history) whine about lowering oil prices. However, OPEC is not so stupid as to strangle the economies of all those countries that buy its oil.

On Tuesday, most OPEC members agreed to increase oil production on April 1 by 1.45 million barrels a day over the current production ceiling, a 7.5-percent increase. It's estimated that this will ease prices at the pump down 11 to 18 cents, but don't ever expect to pay less than $1 for gas again.

And no whining, please.

READERS write

Military appreciation long overdue at universities

Editor,

To my amazement, I opened the Collegian on Wednesday and read a column that was long overdue.

Angela Kistner's column on having appreciation for military students made me realize again one of the reasons I joined Air Force ROTC. I know that many of you have an opinion of the military and most of those opinions are negative, but just remember that it is the military that keeps this country free so you can have those opinions to express freely.

I'm not saying war is right, and the thought of going to war doesn't exactly get me excited, but no matter what, I still would fight for this country and give my all. I love this country and what it is supposed to stand for, and because of that, I have chosen to wear a uniform. It hurts to know there are people out there who actually would spit on the very people who protect them. This country needs to back their military because without them, would you feel very comfortable sleeping at night?

Would you have any reason to hold your head up and say, "I'm proud to be living in the greatest country in the world?"

Would you feel good about yourself, saying you are free without giving respect to the thousands of people who have given their lives just for you?

The military is not for everyone and that is OK, but please don't disrespect those of us who choose to serve you and this country.

Tom Asbury should pack bags, leave KSU quietly

Editor,

Poor Tom Asbury. Let's hope our departing basketball coach doesn't choke on his sour grapes as he leaves for the West Coast.

Seems Asbury is upset about the way his firing was handled and no progress being made on negotiations to buy out his contract. So what does he do? Instead of displaying class, he goes to the news media and rants on the K-State administration to influence this battle in the court of public opinion.

Nice try, Asbury, but your true color — not purple — is showing.

This is a matter for attorneys on both sides to hammer out, and we don't need to know every detail. Airing your dirty laundry to selected members of the media at home won't gain you any public support or make K-State out to be the bad guy.

Your job was in jeopardy this season after Athletic Director Max Urlick told you at least an even record was necessary in the conference. Following a mid-February meeting with Urlick, the Collegian reported that as the meeting concluded, Asbury said his attorney would be in touch. That's a clear signal this was becoming a potential legal issue, and that's why there was limited contact between Urlick and Asbury.

I'd liked to address several of your parting shots.

First, your failure to connect with K-State fans. Your sarcastic remark reported in the Topeka Capital-Journal says it all: "I never really worried too much about perception. I didn't wear bib overalls and a straw hat too often, so maybe I didn't connect well enough."

Tom, us Wildcat folk ain't got a lot of brains, but I reckon you'd figure out we don't much like that kinda talkin'. I ain't that what you city slickers call a dis?

Second, I believe it is possible to build a respectable program at K-State without cheating. Bill Snyder took over one of the worst football programs in the nation and built it into a powerhouse without breaking the rules. Hard work and commitment were the essential ingredients.

Third, you can't build a program without fan support. You didn't have it because you never actively sought its development. Your arrogance was evident to all K-State fans and was a main contributor to your demise.

Obviously, this has been a bad chapter in K-State's basketball history. I trust the one Jim Wooldridge writes will be better.

Deaths linked to Ugandan sect near 700

By CRAIG NELSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RUGAZI, Uganda — The children and neighbors who had looked on in horrified wonder for two days drifted away Wednesday, accustomed by now to the gruesome sight of shirtless workers tugging twisted bodies through a narrow doorway onto the green lawn.

That didn't mean the horror had ceased. The death count linked to a Christian doomsday sect climbed ever higher Wednesday — to nearly 700 — in what officials say is one of the largest mass murders in recent history.

The latest collection of twisted, decaying bodies was uncovered in the plain gray fieldstone house of Dominic Kataribabo, an excommunicated Roman Catholic priest and a sect leader.

By mid-afternoon, the workers' two-day task was complete: 81 mostly naked bodies of nameless people were pulled from the brown earth beneath the floor of a 10-by-10 foot room in Kataribabo's home, examined briefly and reburied. Earlier this week, 74 mutilated and strangled bodies, many of them children, were unearthed from a mass grave in a small sugarcane field in Kataribabo's backyard.

By Wednesday, the gruesome task had sapped the swagger of Ugandan investigators and forensic experts who arrived here Monday to figure out how so many people had died and who killed them. They had few answers, and police were looking for more graves.

"I want to know why these people were killed," said a muted Godfrey Bangirana, a senior criminal investigator from the distant capital, Kampala.

Wednesday's discoveries bring to at least 673 the number of dead found in three compounds in southwestern Uganda that once belonged to the sect, which had up to 1,000 members. Officials said they believe most of the dead were sect members.

Scenes of horror linked to the apocalyptic sect have emerged repeatedly since March 17, when fire engulfed the chapel of a compound in nearby Kanungu.

At least 330 people burned to death there. Kataribabo, 64, is believed to have been among the dead — a body thought to be his was found in the ruins, still wearing a clerical collar.

Authorities initially called the conflagration a mass suicide. But within days, investigators discovered six strangled, mutilated corpses in a pit latrine on the compound, triggering a murder investigation.

Days after the fire, 153 more decomposing bodies were found buried in a Buhunga village compound belonging to the sect. Then, on Friday, police discovered the first Rugazi mass grave when they came to inspect Kataribabo's compound.

Investigators found the bodies in the house after Kataribabo's nephew, Bart Bainomukama, told them his uncle had said he was digging a pit for a refrigerator. A hole driven through the floor quickly revealed a human leg. That led to the discovery of the 81 additional corpses.

Of the bodies pulled out, 48 were children. Two-thirds were female. They all were interred on the same day about a month ago, police pathologist Thaddeus Barungi said.

As the bodies were found, neighbors wondered how the strangulation of so many people could go unheard, how the digging of graves and the burials of more than 100 people could pass unnoticed.

Authorities are pursuing the two main leaders of the Movement for the Restoration of the Ten Commandments of God, Cleodonia Mwerinde and Joseph Kibwetere, an excommunicated Roman Catholic.

The pair had predicted that the world would end last Dec. 31. When that didn't happen, authorities believe, members demanded the return of possessions they had surrendered to join the sect, rebelled and were slaughtered.

In terms of deaths, the killing has begun to approach the 1978 Jonestown massacre in the jungles of Guyana.

In that incident, Peoples Temple leader Jim Jones convinced hundreds of his followers to drink a cyanide-laced punch. Some tried to escape and were shot. More than 900 died.

In Uganda, details were emerging about Kataribabo, who was drawn to the sect soon after its inception in 1990. From a parish pulpit near his hilltop compound in Rugazi, 160 miles southwest of Kampala, he urged the Catholic church to adhere more strictly to the Ten Commandments.

The Rev. John Baptist Kabuki, then the local bishop, did not tolerate Kataribabo's criticism, said Michael Karyango, the bishop's nephew. The two also clashed over money for development projects.

California leads U.S. in emissions policies

By STEVE LAWRENCE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The future of electric cars in the United States well could be determined when California decides whether to pursue — or to back away from — a requirement for pollution-free vehicles.

The state's Air Resources Board is to rule this fall on whether to keep, modify or drop a rule requiring that 10 percent of new cars and light trucks sold in the state have zero emissions.

The rule would affect all automakers selling at least 3,000 new cars a year in the state, and would take effect with 2003 models.

With California the nation's leader in requiring cleaner cars, environmentalists and health groups expect a campaign by auto companies to overturn or weaken the requirement. It has been scaled back twice already.

"It's going to be an environmental litmus test, an indication how green this administration is," said Roland Hwang, transportation program director for the Union of Concerned Scientists.

The Air Resources Board chairman, Alan Lloyd, is committed to the zero-emission requirement, spokesman Jerry Martin said. But others seem more willing to make changes.

"Until such time as the general public feels comfortable with the range of the vehicle, our attempts to get more of them on the road are going to be hampered," said board member Joseph Calhoun.

The rule would require that thousands of the cars or light trucks be battery-powered electric vehicles, though manufacturers could meet up to 60 percent of the requirement with low-emission cars. Five of Nissan's super-low-polluting Sentras, for example, would count as one zero-emission vehicle.

The decision has implications for at least three other states — New York, Massachusetts and Vermont — that have matched California's requirement. Texas is considering whether to adopt the mandate.

The federal Clean Air Act gives states the choice of following federal emission requirements or adopting California's tougher standards.

Allegations subtract from sports world

Allegations.

Unfortunately, for sports fans, this word is found in association with college basketball seemingly every day.

VIEWPOINT

BOSS

If you're angry about something — make an allegation. When things aren't going your way — make an allegation. Heck, if things start getting a little lackluster in the college basketball world, you can just make an allegation to stir things up. Frankly, it makes me sick. These allegations do nothing more than place a thick cloud over what once was a sport promoting sportsmanship and honest athletic competition.

Take Indiana head coach Bobby Knight for example. Granted, I've never been a huge fan of the guy (or the Hoosier basketball program in general), but recent allegations of his physical and mental abuse toward players is utterly ridiculous.

"We've never had NCAA violations for recruiting or academics or anything else," Knight told The Associated Press. "Our teams have been able to win more games in the '70s, '80s and the '90s than any team in our conference."

"I don't expect everybody to agree with everything I do or say. My mom doesn't."

Here's a coach who has taken Indiana to the NCAA Tournament for 15 consecutive years. Now, all of a sudden, people are turning their backs on him in shock because of "allegations" brought forth from two former Hoosier players.

However, nothing has been proven true. There is no reason for Indiana fans to recoil and judge Knight for something I don't even believe he did.

Now, I already told you that I don't like the guy, so why am I so quick to declare his innocence, you ask? Well, actually, the entire thing is pretty outrageous once you get the whole story behind it.

It all started in mid-March with former Hoosier player Neil Reed. In an interview with CNN/SI, Reed accused Knight of choking him during practice and contended he was physically and mentally abused by Knight, without offering any specifics.

Why don't you go whine to your mother, Reed? Knight perhaps is the most disciplined coach in the nation, and it's pretty obvious to me that you couldn't handle it.

Knight simply coaches according to his philosophy.

"I'll bet that I've done, since I've been in coaching, about 1,000 things to motivate kids or teams," Knight said in response to Reed's allegations, "and I'll guarantee that a lot of them I wouldn't want to talk about at a church social or a PTA meeting or a garden party. But we're not teaching kids to play canasta."

That's just Knight's style of coaching, and by looking at the success he's had, it obviously works. It's just a shame that people like Reed are dim-witted enough to confuse motivation with abuse.

In fact, Knight told reporters the reason Reed no longer was with the team following the 1996-97 season was that he was voted off the team by returning players by a unanimous 8-0 margin. Can we say "bitter"? Now there's a motive for you.

Knight went on to say that Reed often was laughed at by his teammates because of his lack of work ethic and approach coming into a game.

Seniors A.J. Guyton and Michael Lewis spoke up for the embattled coach.

"Neil Reed was voted off the team by Mike and I, along with six other players," Guyton said. "That alone says what we thought about Neil Reed."

Sounds to me like Reed was more abused by his former teammates than from the likes of his coach. Is he going to lash out at them next? Maybe he'll start a terrorist plot to bring the entire Indiana basketball program down. Or maybe he'll keep his mouth shut like he should have all along.

However, once Reed's allegations seemingly died down, former Hoosier Ricky Calloway decided to join in on the "festivities" and declare a second allegation.

Sunday, Calloway told the Houston Chronicle he saw Knight punch former player Steve Alford. However, the AP reported that Alford, now the head coach at Iowa, denied any such occurrence during his career at Indiana.

"Nothing along those lines ever happened," Alford said Sunday in a statement issued by the Iowa sports information department.

Despite both allegations against Knight, the Hoosier great has received backing and support from other coaches around the nation.

Temple coach John Chaney was quick to rally to the defense of his Indiana colleague after the first allegation. Chaney told the AP that the problem lies in American sports fans "buying bad behavior."

"I think a coach who will not buy bad

SOLID SUCCESS

Pitching, hitting, fielding lead Wildcats to string of wins

STORY BY MIKE VIETTI ■ PHOTOS BY JUSTIN HAYWORTH

It's no coincidence that when K-State puts together solid pitching, hitting and fielding into a single game, the Wildcats usually win.

That was the case Wednesday when the Cats (9-16) beat Niagara (8-7) 11-2.

"We've put together six good games during this stretch where we've gone 4-2, but we've had an opportunity to win all six ball games," K-State head coach Mike Clark said. "We've just got to continue to build on that."

From the plate, K-State got its bats swinging well early and often; in the first inning, the first four K-State hitters reached base. Senior second baseman Chad Tabor singled to lead off the game, and he was followed by junior catcher Graham McAllister, who was hit by a pitch.

Junior outfielder Kasey Weishaar walked before freshman designated hitter Pat Maloney singled to bring in Tabor and McAllister. Junior shortstop J.D. Loudabarger grounded out to score Weishaar, which was followed by junior outfielder Benton Oleen's single that scored Maloney to give the Cats a 4-0 lead.

K-State notched another run in the second inning when Loudabarger singled in Weishaar to push the Cats' lead to 5-0 before exploding in the third inning for another four runs.

With one out, senior first baseman Travis Andre, junior outfielder Chris Nelson and Tabor walked in succession. After McAllister struck out swinging, Weishaar singled, bringing in Andre and Nelson. Maloney, who finished the day 3-for-3 with four RBIs, tripled scoring Weishaar and Tabor making the score 9-0 in favor of K-State.

The Cats added runs in the next two innings.

"The majority of runs we scored were with two-out hits, which was really key," Clark said. "It was just good to see offense up and down the line-up — the guys just did a nice job in creating offense throughout the game."

From the mound, sophomore Luke Robertson (2-5) continued the success K-State hurlers have been enjoying since the Homestead Challenge last weekend. The right-hander threw a no-hitter through four innings, before giving up his only hit of the day to lead off the fifth. Robertson struck out eight of the 18 batters he faced and walked none in his six innings of work.

"The whole thing for us is getting ahead in the count and then being able to mix and use our offspeed and breaking pitches to set up the fastball,"

Sophomore pitcher flirts with perfection in 11-2 win

By JUSTIN HAYWORTH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

K-State pitcher Luke Robertson had a brush with perfection Wednesday.

The sophomore in K-State's 11-2 victory over Niagara had a perfect game going into the fifth inning.

Robertson had plenty of run support as the Wildcats scored four runs in the first, one in the second and four more in the third inning. Meanwhile, Robertson was perfect.

"It makes it easy when they come out and put a lot of runs on the board," Robertson said. "It was easy for me to concentrate on my job with the defense playing good behind me, and the offense scoring runs."

Robertson pitched six innings and did not allow a hit until the fifth inning. In the game, Robertson surrendered no walks while striking out eight to get the win, moving his record to 2-5.

"He threw a great game," K-State head coach Mike Clark said. "He's a competitor."

Robertson came out firing, striking out the first two batters he faced and then ended the first inning with a ground out to the shortstop. He came out in

Outdoor track season starts strong; several athletes post personal bests

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

It's two weeks into the outdoor season, and several track athletes already have had personal best performances.

These early personal records are an indication of the improvement the team has made as a whole, head coach Cliff Rovelto said.

At the Cal-San Diego Open meet Sunday, the Cats brought home eight first-place finishes, and on the same day at the Stanford Invitational, junior distance runner Korene Hinds ran the fastest collegiate time of the year in the 3,000 meters.

Tuesday at the Emporia State Spring Twilight, the men's and women's teams combined for four first-place finishes and nine runner-up performances.

"We've had good quality marks, and we've had good early marks," Rovelto said. "To set a personal best at the beginning of the year, you don't see that very often."

One of the best performances of the early season came from Hinds, who finished second in the 3,000 meters at the Stanford Invitational with an NCAA qualifying time of 9:11.82. Everything about this time was fantastic, Rovelto said.

"It's really, really good. It was an intelligently run race, it was a fast time and she beat head-to-head many of the top collegiate athletes," Rovelto said. "It was a huge personal best for her, and it was an NCAA automatic qualifying time."

Another outstanding performer has been sophomore sprinter Terence Newman, who finished first in both the 100- (10.48) and 200- (21.39) meter races at San Diego. The 100 meter time actually was a legal time, meaning the wind was under 2 meters per second, and so qualifies as the fastest legal K-State 100-meter race ever run. These fast times could be a sign of things to come, but taking a month off for spring football might make improvement more difficult, Rovelto said.

"It was the fastest he's ever run the 100 or 200," Rovelto said. "He's going to run faster than that. For sure he's going to run in the 10.30s, and he's capable of running in the 10.20s, but it's tough juggling spring ball and track."

Newman, Hinds and the rest of the team's next chance to improve upon their times will be Saturday at the Florida Invitational in Gainesville, Fla.

KSU golfers take 5th

By DEREK BOSS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The men's golf team returned to action Monday and Tuesday after a monthlong break at the Stevinson Ranch Invitational in Stevinson, Calif.

K-State had its best finale of the season, shooting a final round 308 Tuesday, to finish fifth in the 14-team tournament.

Individually, the Wildcats were led by sophomore Scott McNeely, whose final round of 74 earned him a tie for second place. His score of 218 for the meet was one stroke off the leader.

McNeely's finish was the best of his young career, surpassing a 16th place tie at the Wildcat Intercollegiate this past fall.

The Stevinson Ranch Invitational was the second consecutive tournament in which K-State has had a golfer finish with runner-up honors, following sophomore Bryan Milberger's second-place performance at the Northern Invasion Intercollegiate on Feb. 28.

Milberger tallied the Cats' second-best individual effort, capturing a tie for 30th place with a three-day total score of 231.

Sophomore Matt Williams was the only other K-State golfer to finish in the top 50, notching a 44th-place tie following a final-round 76 Tuesday.

The Big 12 Conference fared well at the Stevinson Ranch, with teams occupying the top-two slots of the tournament.

Kansas defended its tournament title, taking the team trophy over second place Colorado by eight strokes.

K-State returns to action April 10-11 as they travel to Wichita to compete in the Diet Pepsi-Shocker Golf Classic.

The Crestview Country Club will be host to the 15-team event.

The meet marks the Cats' first tournament in the Sunflower State since the Kansas Invitational on Sept. 20-21.

the second inning and also struck out the first two men faced and ended the inning with a ground out to the second baseman.

The Niagara batters got a little tougher at the plate in the third inning, but Robertson still had their number, getting two batters to ground out before recording his fifth strikeout to end the inning.

In the fourth, Robertson got a groundout followed by a strikeout then a groundout to end the inning.

After giving up a lead off single to Chris Murray in the fifth inning, Robertson didn't let losing the no-hitter stop his momentum.

He got the next batter to ground into a double play and finished the inning by getting a ground out to the second baseman.

Robertson said he couldn't remember ever having a no-hitter going into the fifth inning, and he was thinking about the possibilities of keeping it alive when he was in the dugout.

"The guys pretty much left me alone when I came off the field," Robertson said.

"I'd just find a corner when I got back in the dugout and think about what was working and not working for me."

Clark said.

K-State had a single error from the field in the seventh inning when junior shortstop Lucas Pfannenstiel bobbled a grounder.

With a three-game series in Lubbock, Texas, against Texas Tech looming this weekend, Clark said he's comfortable with the level his team is playing at.

"We're getting better — the pitching's gotten better, the hitting's gotten better, it just takes time," Clark said.

"I think we're in the best shape we've been in all season."

Tennessee players involved in crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAMAR, Miss. — A van carrying nine members of the Tennessee-Martin baseball team disintegrated after colliding with a tractor-trailer early Wednesday.

The coach and two players were in critical condition.

The crash occurred around midnight, 45 miles east of Memphis, Tenn.

Three university vans were about 100 miles from home after an 8-5 victory at Mississippi in Oxford.

Coach Victor "Bubba" Cates, 40, was driving the lead van, which was hit by the truck driven by James L. Leonard Jr. The driver for Specialty Feeds Inc. of Memphis, Tenn., was not hurt.

Players David Tillman and Jason Alford were hospitalized in critical condition, and four others had lesser injuries.

"From indications we've received from Mr. Leonard and people on the van, the van had stopped but apparently pulled out in front of the 18-wheeler," said Sgt. H.L. Kitchens, spokesman for the Mississippi Highway Patrol. "The van completely disintegrated, throwing the people out."

The van occupants were wearing seat belts, Kitchens said.

Player Paul Slack told his mother that the truck hit the van, spinning it and turning it on its side.

He viewed the accident from another van that wasn't hit.

"He said it could have been much worse if the trucker hadn't tried to avoid the van," Linda Stack told radio station WCMT in Martin, Tenn. "He commended the driver for helping get the injured players out and covering them up."

Other drivers stopped to help the injured players, covering them with blankets, Linda Slack said.

Cates will be issued a citation for failing to yield the right of way in connection with the accident, said Capt. Johnny Kerr of the Mississippi Highway Patrol.

Cates, Tillman and Alford were being treated at Regional Medical Center in Memphis.

Doctors removed Cates' spleen and repaired a punctured lung. His injuries did not appear to be life-threatening, Martin spokesman Bud Grimes said.

The injuries sustained by Tillman and Alford were not released. Alford, 23, is from Bradford, Tenn. Tillman, 20, is from Waverly, Tenn.

"People are generally shocked and saddened by what has happened," Grimes said. "At the same time, everyone I come in contact with is very grateful there were no fatalities. We are also encouraged that the updates we're hearing on coach Cates are very favorable."

Students and faculty at the 5,700-student university planned to sign an oversized card during lunch to send to the victims, Grimes said. Athletes with other Tennessee-Martin teams on the northwest Tennessee campus planned to tie ribbons on a fence to show their support.

Two players — Curtis Wooten, 20, of Memphis and Billy Holt, 21, of Bartlett, Tenn. — were treated and released from Regional Medical Center.

Hospitalized in fair condition there were Dan Stephens, 20, of Clarksville, Tenn.; Michael Roof, 20, of Paducah, Ky.; and Adam Green, 18, of Cordova, Tenn. Adam Gibson, 20, of Louisville, Ky., was upgraded Wednesday from fair to satisfactory condition.

Player Lanier English was at Jackson-Madison County Hospital in his hometown of Jackson, Tenn. English, 20, injured his hand and was listed in fair condition.

behavior is a good coach, and he's rare," Chaney said. "Bob Knight is rare. I am rare. I am another Bob Knight."

Strong words from a strong man. These are the coaches college basketball is built around, coaches who know how to get their players mentally and physically prepared—coaches who know how to win.

The Dean Smiths, the John Woodens. Let's not take it for granted when we've got a coach like Bobby Knight.

He might not be a fan favorite everywhere; heck, he might be utterly despised for his notorious actions during press conferences. The bottom line is—he's a good coach.

Maybe that's what's missing in college basketball today.

sensation in the Legislature, students need to be counted as living in Manhattan.

"There are certain main educational issues that are discussed in the state legislature," he said. "It gives us a greater proportional voice," he said.

Oleen said she is encouraging students to mark that they live in Manhattan.

It is most important for those students who live out of state. Oleen said if these students want to be counted at all, they need to mark Manhattan, because the federal census will count them in Manhattan.

"Students who live out of state must say they live in Manhattan, or they will not be counted anywhere," she said. "No one buys our system."

Oleen said the people at K-State have been terrific in carrying out the 100-percent student compliance mandate by the state.

K-State receives no funding to carry the mandate, but it does receive hard copies of the form to distribute to the students. Formerly,

K-State handed out the forms at enrollment times, but this year it is using KATS.

Students have to fill out the questionnaire before they are allowed to access their KATS account, Jones said.

Jones said he is positive the university will reach its compliance deadline of June 1 due to the amount of students who will have to use KATS before they leave for the summer, especially due to grades, which now are available only on KATS.

He also said he believes the Student Governing Association election voting, which only was available on KATS, helped speed the process.

One of their biggest concerns was whether it would deter people from voting, he said.

"We didn't want this to be a roadblock," he said, but they did have a boost during the elections last week.

K-State has an advantage because of KATS, Jones said. Most Kansas colleges are having the forms filled out manually, but he said he thinks the University of Kansas is looking into an online system.

So far, Jones' office has not done a marketing program to promote students declaring Manhattan as their permanent residence, but he said SGA has discussed starting a marketing campaign.

"Beyond that, we haven't pushed students in that direction," he said.

He said some students might mark Manhattan with the thought that they live here 10 months out of the year and feel that this is more of their home.

But some students see it differently.

Paul Schimming, senior in music education, said he did not mark Manhattan as his permanent address.

"I knew that I wouldn't always be at K-State forever and probably not in Manhattan, either," he said.

He said he was not aware of the state census questionnaire and was surprised when it appeared when he logged onto KATS.

Jones said he hopes there will be some re-evaluation after this adjustment. He said the Secretary of State's office lobbied hard last year to try to change it.

Ruling helps cities ban nude dancing

By LAURIE ASSEO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court made it easier for local governments to ban nude dancing, the entertainment in about 3,000 adult clubs nationwide, ruling Wednesday that a performer's freedom of expression can be restricted by forcing her to wear pasties and a G-string.

Nude dancing can be banned in an effort to combat crime and other harms that adult entertainment clubs often attract, the justices said in a splintered decision reinstating a public-nudity ordinance in Erie, Pa.

Such dancing is expressive conduct but it falls only within the outer gambit of the Constitution's First Amendment free-speech protection, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote in the court's main opinion.

The ban promotes Erie's interest in combating the negative secondary effects associated with adult entertainment establishments, such as crime, and was not aimed at a dancer's erotic message, O'Connor said.

Although the court's rationale was divided, the decision is sure to have broad effect. Nude entertainment is featured in about 3,000 adult clubs nationwide, the justices were told when the case was argued in November.

"We're delighted," said Valerie Sprenkle, Erie's assistant city solicitor. "We didn't ban any expression ... What's being regulated is the means of expression."

Sprenkle said dancers at a nude dancing club in the city will be required to cover up to the extent required by the ordinance.

The ruling bolsters the effect of a 1991 Supreme Court ruling that let Indiana ban all barroom-style nude dancing under a state law generally prohibiting public nudity. That decision was badly splintered, however, and when the Pennsylvania Supreme Court struck down Erie's ordinance, it said the 1991 ruling offered little guidance.

Wednesday's ruling was divided, too. The court voted 7-2 to allow bans on nude dancing but voted 6-3 to reinstate the Erie ordinance.

O'Connor said even if the ordinance has some minimal effect on the erotic message by muting that portion of the expression that occurs when the last stitch is dropped, the dancers are free to perform wearing pasties and G-strings.

She compared the nude-dancing ban to a prohibition on burning draft cards, which the Supreme Court upheld in 1968. In that case, the government sought to prevent the means of the expression and not the expression of antiwar sentiment itself, she said.

Gumby's offers pizza, pub atmosphere

By MARK MCCLASKEY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan has yet another pizza place to add to the number of locations to get a pie.

After a long wait, Gumby's Pizza and Pub now is open on the corner of 11th and Moro streets in Aggieville.

Gumby's is the home of the "Big Ass" pizza. The "Big Ass" is a 20-inch pizza that was developed by the company's founders, Jeff O'Brien and Chance Hippler.

Gumby's also features a pub type atmosphere, including pool tables, a patio area with picnic tables and sports bar type decorations. The seating occupancy is 90 people.

"The concept of a pizza and pub was developed in Athens, Georgia, at a restaurant there," said Doug Macejewski, local co-owner of Gumby's. He said the restaurant in Georgia had annual sales of $600,000 before the pizza and pub idea was introduced. After the opening of the pizza and pub, the restaurant grossed $1.1 million in the first year alone.

Macejewski said O'Brien's idea was such a success that they decided to begin the Gumby's chain. There now are 24 Gumby's restaurants in existence, and Macejewski said he is happy to be in Manhattan.

"We signed the lease to open last fall," he said. "In Manhattan, we had the highest sales ever of any opening day in the company."

Gumby's in Manhattan opened on Friday. All Gumby's are located in college towns throughout the country. There is a Gumby's in Lawrence that has been in business for nine years.

"We felt that Manhattan and Aggieville would be a good place to open a Gumby's," Macejewski said.

Macejewski has been in the restaurant business 24 years, in which time he has run such establishments as Fud Ruckers in Overland Park, Kan. His career originated in upstate New York, and he has been operating Gumby's in the Lawrence area for about a year and a half. He co-owns the restaurant in Manhattan with Hippler and O'Brien.

Macejewski said getting the engineer to begin work was the biggest reason why it took so long to open. He said a local architect worked on the store, but an outside engineer was hired. Once the engineer started, it only took one month to get opened, he said.

Gumby's in Manhattan employs 42 people, 23 of whom are drivers. Hours are 11 a.m. to 2:30 a.m. Monday through Wednesday, 11 a.m. to 3 a.m. Thursday through Saturday and 11 a.m. to 2:30 a.m. on Sundays.

Students at K-State seem to like the idea of Gumby's and their "Big Ass" pizza.

"It was well worth the wait," said Dale Kastner, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine.

TICKETS

increase in most football ticket prices, Adolph said the game at Arrowhead Stadium in which the Wildcats will play the University of Iowa will offer students a discount price of $20.

"There is a limited amount of seating, and we are working on plans right now concerning that game, which will be announced later this week," Adolph said.

Adolph said the price increase was made to keep pace with the growing expenses the athletic offices have but that ticket price increases are not something that happen often.

"The increase was not huge for students," Adolph said. "We think the way we are handling tickets for the students is easy and fair."

Adolph said athletic tickets sold over KATS for the first time last year and that it has worked wonderfully.

"Students can purchase tickets when they pre-enroll, and we think it is much easier that way," Adolph said.

Urick said tickets went on sale over KATS Monday and using KATS is a much easier process for the athletic offices and the students.

"Everything the students have to do is explained to them on the Internet," Urick said.

Adolph said there have not been many changes concerning ticket sales this year other than the increase in prices.

"We are doing everything else the same," Adolph said. "The increase in prices is the only change because we had to keep up with the expenses."

leave the office every day, you haven't answered half the questions that are out there," he said.

Geoffrey Vaughan, senior in golf course management, said his appreciation of Woodward's work with The Washington Post was what drew him to the lecture.

"This was a unique opportunity," Vaughan said. "It's great that they can get this type of speaker to come to K-State."

Student Body President Jason Heinrich said his podium-side chair to the Landon Lecture Series during his term has offered a learning experience.

"It's been interesting watching the speakers interact with the audience connecting with the people in the seats differently," he said.

"Bob Woodward was a lot more relaxed and laid back, whereas when you get a lot of the politicians there to speak, you almost felt like they had that invisible wall."

Recipe Round-up

Residents' parents submit recipes for cook-off in Derby

By REED DUNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

A group of more than 80 entries was narrowed down to eight. From those, two winners were selected. K-State's Department of Housing and Dining Services sponsored the 2000 Home Sweet Home Recipe Contest on Wednesday afternoon at Derby Dining Center. The contest had a panel of students, professionals and others who tasted and judged the recipes to select the two that would be added to the dining center menu.

Rachel Esely, assistant dietitian at Kramer Dining Center, said the contest invites parents of the residents to submit recipes that would be feasible for the centers to prepare. "There's an entry form that is sent out to parents, encouraging them to enter," Esely said. "The winner's incentive is their child gets $250 off their room and board bill the next year."

The contest has been taking place since the 1980s, providing a chance for many people to get involved, Esely said.

"It's an opportunity for parents to be involved," she said. "It's an opportunity for us to appeal more to students."

Lori Showalter, freshman in life science and pre-veterinary medicine, was one of the students asked to help judge the contest. She said she had never heard of the contest, but it was something she thought was a creative idea.

"I think it's a neat idea. It's a neat way for parents to get involved," Showalter said. "The prize is also neat."

Aside from the first-place winner earning the $250 toward room and board for their child, the first runner-up earns $100. Honorable mention entries are awarded with Quik Cats and T-H-E Bakery coupons.

Nancy Minns, Wichita resident, was awarded first runner-up with her teriyaki roast beef recipe. Minns said she decided to enter the contest after she received the information in the mail.

Above: Rachel Esely, assistant dietitian at the Kramer Dining Center, and Jennifer Watson, training table coordinator for Housing and Dining Services, served on the panel of professionals who judged the recipes to select the two recipes to be added to the dining center menu. Left: K-State's Department of Housing and Dining Services sponsored the 2000 Home Sweet Home Recipe Contest on Wednesday afternoon at the Derby Dining Center. The contest had a panel of students, professionals and others taste and judge the recipes.

"I got a brochure in the mail from the dining hall and thought it was worth a try," she said. "I don't think it would be my daughter's first choice, but I was thinking about other students."

Minns said the recipe is an original family recipe she has adapted to serve guests when she and her husband invite students to their house.

"I've used it for probably 20 or 25 years," she said. "I just think the younger crowd enjoys having that entree available."

Jan Lynne Wood, Overland Park, Kan., resident, said she was shocked when she heard her mother-in-law's brownie recipe had earned first place in the contest.

"We were just really surprised," Wood said. "My husband and I thought it would just be kind of fun, but we didn't have any idea we'd ever win."

Jennifer Watson, training table coordinator for Housing and Dining Services, said the entrees provided a variety of recipes.

"A lot of people sent in recipes for entrees," she said. "It was split between entrees and desserts, but we did get a few side-dish recipes."

The winning roast beef and brownie recipes will be added to the sandwich buffet for this weekend's All-University Open House festivities, Watson said.

"For lunch at open house, we are having a sandwich buffet," Watson said.

"We will have the two overall winners on the table, too."

Greek housing and residence hall students will be getting their 2000 Federal Census forms hand delivered to them next week.

Sherman Parks Jr., district manager of the local census office, said fraternities, sororities and residence halls are treated as special places because they are group-living centers.

Ockert Fourie, Manhattan senior planner for community development, said the Census Bureau defines a special place as a residence or living arrangement other than the usual house, apartment or mobile home which contains one or more buildings where unrelated people usually live or stay in group or shared living arrangements.

Normally federal census forms are mailed to each household, but Parks said this would be difficult for group-living centers.

"If there are 20 or 30 females living in a sorority, it would be a thick form," he said.

On Monday and Tuesday the census office will start training people for the Special Places Program, and on Wednesday it will send them out to deliver the forms.

"What we've done prior to this is that we've identified where all these entities are located," Parks said.

Contact people for each organization or building have given the census office rosters of the people living there.

"Once we've delivered the forms to the people, we'll come back after a short period of time to pick up the forms," Parks said.

The deadline to complete the forms is the latter part of April, Parks said, but he would prefer that the students complete them earlier in case there are any corrections that need to be made.

As with the forms that are mailed to households, one in six of the students in each organization or building will get the long census form, Parks said. This will be based upon the roster the contact person gives the office.

"If they provided us a list in alphabetical order, you can almost predict who will get it," he said.

Parks said it doesn't cost any extra money for the Special Places Program because the census taker only has to go to one place to get information on a lot of residents. When the forms are mailed to households, it costs the government $2 per household if the form is mailed back promptly and $38 if the census office has to send out a census taker.

Some students who live in what's considered a special place might think they have already filled out a census form through KATS, but that form was for the state of Kansas only. The form they will be getting next week is for the U.S. Census Bureau.

Parks said it is very important for students to fill these forms out. Right now, Manhattan's population is about 47,000, but if it reaches a population of more than 50,000 it would qualify for more grants and federal aid, and 23 out of the 25 federal agencies distribute money based on census data.

The money that Manhattan could get could go toward things like roads, transportation, police and fire departments, from which K-State students also benefit, Parks said.

"It's a nice cooperative effort if the students and the university will in fact participate," he said. "If they don't fill out their forms, they're really shortchanging themselves and their communities."

Fuel additive recommended

■ Kansas Farm Bureau supports switch to ethanol due to increasing gas prices.

By JASON BECK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Farm Bureau is urging the United States to switch its fuel additive to ethanol rather than the current additive, methyl tertiary-butyl ether, because the price of gasoline is rising.

Warren Parker, director of communications and public relations for the KFB, said that because ethanol is a renewable resource, unlike MTBE, Kansas farmers and ranchers are pushing for the switch.

Ethanol, which can be produced with local corn and milo, is the most logical alternative to the current additive, said Patty Clark, director of public policy for the KFB.

Clark said ethanol is the best choice for an oxygenant, or an additive in fuel that cleans up the fumes that are dispensed by burning gasoline.

"Ethanol is an obvious substitute now that the government is moving to ban MTBE," Clark said.

Nominations made for Senate chair

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 1999-2000 Student Senate met for the final time Thursday night. Immediately following the meeting's adjournment, the next Senate met to be sworn in and to nominate people for the position of Senate chair.

Three people were nominated by the new Senate for the position.

Travis Lenkner, government relations chair; Crystal Campbell, student affairs and social services chair; and Dustin Petrik, operations chair, will be competing for the position, which will be announced next Thursday.

The Senate chair runs Senate meetings but does not vote. The outgoing Senate chair is Jake Worcester, student body president-elect.

Installation of the new Senate vice chair and of the student body president and vice president also will be next Thursday.

At their final meeting, 1999-2000 senators discussed how Student Governing Association funding regulations should be applied.

Petrik said he wanted to make the regulations simpler and said there was a difference between student and university community groups.

He said no funds should be given to the university.

Outdoor smoking ban defeated at Penn State

By DAVID KINNEY
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Penn State University students weighed in Wednesday on whether their campus should be tobacco-free, both indoors and out.

Penn State banned smoking indoors in 1992. On Wednesday, students voted on whether to ban it outdoors as well — and they rejected the idea, barely.

The referendum failed 1,743-1,482. Undergraduate Student Government representatives were surprised the vote was so close.

"I don't think it's going to happen anytime soon," said Matt Roan, a 20-year-old junior from Ardmore who was elected USG president on the same ballot. He voted against the idea.

The issue isn't secondhand smoke, but the outdoor litter problem that has grown since indoor smoking was banned. The school now spends $150,000 annually paying landscapers who pick up butts and empty outdoor ash-

University mourns loss of influential sociology professor

By DANICA COTO

Leave it to Adam to do such things. He kept swimming up to a week before dying of cancer, making sure he would do the side stroke on his right side because his left was weak.

He would request students' theses when his wife asked him what he wanted to read while he stayed in bed.

He was Donald J. Adamchak, a K-State sociology professor who died March 16 of cancer.

More than 60 people attended his memorial service Thursday morning at All Faiths chapel.

Adamchak touched the lives of students and colleagues, Sitawa Kimuna, graduate student in sociology, said.

"He was just such a special person. You couldn't ask for a better professor," she said. "What stands out is that he says his mind. He's very trustful, dedicated and enthusiastic. You cannot meet him and go away with nothing."

Before coming to work at K-State in 1978, he was a visiting professor in Namibia and Zimbabwe. He also conducted demographic research in rural America and taught a social gerontology course sponsored by the United Nations in Malta. This international background and exposure made him a favorite among K-State's foreign students.

"He made it so much warmer here because he traveled so much," Kimuna said. "Initially, when you meet him, he gives you such a big smile."

But Adamchak went farther than that, said Harald Prins, professor of anthropology.

"The most striking thing was how important Adam was to students from Third World countries," he said. "He became somewhat of a major beacon in the sociology department."

Prins said Adamchak loaned a Tutsi student some money so he could finish up his education. There also was an eerie connection between Adamchak and the student. Both got bad headaches at the same time and were diagnosed with a brain tumor the same weekend.

This didn't stop Adamchak. This was the same professor who called Kimuna one Saturday morning so she could come over to his house and discuss winning strategies for a job interview.

Kellie McEwen, graduate student in sociology, said her life also was changed by Adamchak.

He taught her how to be a better sociologist and a better person, she said.

"He was intimidating, very confident and very intelligent. It came through in everything he did," she said. "But he was a great guy you had to respect. You just had to."

During the service, friends and colleagues stood up and addressed the audience, talking about how Adamchak influenced them.

Michael Timberlake, head of the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, said Adamchak made him feel at home when he came to K-State.

"What I learned from him is that it's important to be honest with colleagues and students," he said. "You can be critical but still be interested in them and their personal lives."

Timberlake also spent time with Adamchak outside of work, watching K-State football with him.

Adamchak had a strange combination of passion and intellect, Prins said.

"He was a hard worker, but he knew when to stop the work and enjoy life," he said. "He drank it in and enjoyed it. Everything he did, he did with gusto."

Colleagues weren't the only ones who admired Adamchak. McEwen said he meant so much to her as a sociologist and student.

"He was overall a really great person," she said. "I've never met anyone like him. I don't think I ever will again. He's just one of a kind."

Students who would be interested in contributing toward an Adamchak Memorial Lecture Series should call Kimuna at 395-5610.

Fiji, Gamma Phi to sponsor dodge-ball tourney Sunday

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex will be the site of the first annual Dodge For a Cause benefit dodge ball tournament Sunday.

The tournament will begin at 10:30 a.m. and is a joint sponsorship between the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity and the Gamma Phi Beta sorority.

Tracey Boucher, Gamma Phi philanthropy chairwoman, said the dodge-ball tournament proceeds will go to the Manhattan-area Boys and Girls Club and Geri Johnson, senior in French.

"We held an application process to determine a recipient for the proceeds," Boucher said. "A panel of student senators and deans selected the recipient, trying to keep the money here in Manhattan."

Boucher said Johnson was stricken with mosquito-borne encephalitis and the disease ADE. This eventually led Johnson to suffer from short-term memory loss, trouble with motor skills and trouble with speaking, Boucher said.

Boucher said about 30 teams, both men's and women's, applied during a February registration process.

Boucher said funding for the tournament will come from registration fees and sponsor donations. These sponsors will earn their logos on T-shirts supplied by the houses, Boucher said.

Teams in the tournament will begin with round-robin pool play, with each team guaranteed three games, Boucher said. Pool winners will then advance to an elimination bracket to determine the winners.

Elian's father seeks visa; protests in Miami continue

MIAMI — Elian Gonzalez's father asked for a visa Thursday to come to the United States and take the boy back to Cuba, as dozens of anti-Castro activists linked arms outside the 6-year-old's Miami home, practicing resistance techniques.

The attempt to get a visa hit a procedural snag, however. The father's lawyer asked the State Department for a visa, only to be told that applications must be submitted to the U.S. diplomatic mission in Havana.

"The only person that has the legal and moral authority to speak for Elian Gonzalez is his father," Gregory Craig, an American lawyer for Juan Miguel Gonzalez, said in Washington, D.C. "Juan Miguel Gonzalez is ready at a moment's notice to come to the United States."

Craig said he asked the Immigration and Naturalization Service to allow the boy's father and other Cuban relatives to stay as long as it takes to complete the appeals process. A federal appeals court in Atlanta has scheduled the case for May 11.

Meanwhile, on the street in front of the house in Miami's Little Havana neighborhood where Elian has been staying with his great-uncle, dozens of demonstrators linked arms.

"We will not let Elian's civil rights be violated," said Ramon Saul Sanchez, head of the Democracy Movement, an anti-Castro group.

Sanchez instructed the demonstrators on nonviolent protest, telling them that if the police arrive, they should remain seated and hold out their fists if they were to be handcuffed.

Mother of boy killed while smoking marijuana guilty

OSKALOOSA, Kan. — The mother of an Oskaloosa teen-ager shot to death in February while smoking marijuana with friends has pleaded guilty to contributing to her son's misconduct.

Patricia Back, 39, pleaded guilty Tuesday to possession of marijuana, possession of drug paraphernalia and the misconduct charge.

Back's son, 13-year-old Dakota "Cody" Wesley Back, was shot to death Feb. 27 while smoking marijuana with friends at his home.

Assistant Jefferson County Attorney Vic Braden said the complaint on the misconduct charge read that she willfully caused or encouraged Dakota Back to commit the misdemeanor act of possession of drug paraphernalia.

He said a ceramic smoking pipe was found in the victim's bedroom and that a second pipe was found in a blood-stained chest in another room.

CLARIFICATIONS & corrections

There is a clarification from Thursday's Collegian.

Percy Bibbs, also known as Anderson, was arrested for failure to appear on March 28.

There was an error in Tuesday's Collegian.

Ben Hemmen, public relations chairman for the All-University Open House committee, said open house is not only for prospective students.

The Collegian regrets the error.

Organist to present Bach recital

By CASSIDY HILL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Professional organist Kei Koito will present an all-Johann Sebastian Bach recital at 3 p.m. Sunday in All Faiths Chapel as part of the McCain Performance Series.

Thom Jackson, marketing development officer for McCain, said Koito originally is from Tokyo, Japan, and predicts her recital will be outstanding since she has performed all around the world.

"I am really excited to have Kei Koito perform in Manhattan," Jackson said. "Right now she is performing in New York and has played at both the Lincoln and Kennedy Centers.

"This will be her first performance here in Manhattan and I think she will astonish the audience with her musical skill," Jackson said. "Even though she is not a resident of the United States, she is a famous musician on an international tour."

Jackson said most of Bach's works are sacred pieces and have religious themes.

"The church would ask Bach to play the organ during ceremonies," Jackson said. "This is why most of his pieces were originally for the organ and have religious themes."

Mary Ellen Sutton, professor of music, will give a lecture one hour before the recital in McCain 204 about Koito's program, along with some history of the organ instrument. During the lecture, which is free to the public, Sutton will play parts of each song to the audience.

"Kei Koito's performance should be a great show," Sutton said. "Her first piece, Toccata and Fugue in D minor, is one of Bach's most famous pieces that is played in scary movies and ticket prices

$15 for general public

$13 for senior citizens

$7.50 for children 18 and younger.

during Halloween.

"Her last piece, Passacaglia in C minor, is also well known," Sutton said. "The all-Bach recital celebrates the 250th anniversary of Bach's death."

Barakah Nelson, sophomore in piano performance, said she never has seen a professional organist play and is extremely excited about being able to see Koito's performance.

"I am excited to see her performance," Nelson said. "It is so rare to see a professional organist perform. I have never heard her play, but that doesn't matter, I am just thrilled to see a professional play."

K-State baseball player arrested on DUI charges

By GINA KOHAKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State baseball player Joshua Cavender was stopped for a traffic violation and then arrested for a DUI late Wednesday night.

Cavender, junior in pre-professional elementary education, plays third base and is a leading hitter for the Wildcats.

He was pulled over by Riley County Police Department at 11:19 p.m. Wednesday near the intersection of 11th and Pomeroy streets, Sgt. Lynette Woods of RCPD said.

Cavender is scheduled to appear before a municipal court judge at the Riley County Courthouse on April 6.

K-State Sports Information declined to comment on the situation.

Ceramics subject of today's lecture at Beach art museum

■ Artist's work includes examples of figurative art, porcelain sculpture.

By JAINA K. STUTHEIT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ceramics artist Patty Warashina will give a lecture at 10:30 a.m. today at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

Warashina's work is included in the collections of many museums in the United States, Japan and Australia. She taught at the University of Washington from 1970 to 1995.

Glen Brown, assistant professor of art, said he has admired her work for many years.

"I grew up in the Seattle area where she also lived, so I've been familiar with her work for a long time," he said.

Brown said Warashina's art has developed throughout several different stages.

Her earliest work was influenced by the California-based funk art movement.

"The funk art movement stressed humor, and that type of artwork used gaudy imagery with a lot of shiny colors like gold and silver," Brown said.

"There were a lot of cartoon images being used during that time, similar to the artwork used by the Beatles on the Yellow Submarine album."

Brown said Warashina is best known for her small porcelain figures, which she made during the next stage of her career. He said the figures all were white, and they had distinct facial expressions that demonstrated different emotions.

"The figures would sometimes be interacting with automobiles that were tied or pinned down," he said.

"That gave the effect of power and feeling trapped. This was a time when her work was a kind of psychological, or introspection of her own life. The work seemed to deal with very personal things."

The next stage of Warashina's art, around the early '90s, consisted of larger figures. Brown said some of the full figures were up to eight feet tall. He also said she made some sculptures that were just heads.

"These figures focused on things like the seasons and elements," Brown said.

"Many of them depicted fire, water, air and earth. Sometimes the elements would come into conflict with each other," he said.

One example of that is a piece called "Fire and Ice." It suggests a primal struggle between the two elements.

"This piece has some devilish-looking figures trapped in a block of ice, with different types of weapons protruding from the ice," he said. "It demonstrates human conflicts as well."

Besides ceramics, Brown said Warashina also has done some paintings. The paintings mostly focused on ecological concepts such as nature and damage to the environment.

Brown said Warashina is well-known among figurative artists, and is one of the premier examples of that type of artist.

"I think as far as figurative work in ceramics that incorporates wit goes, she has few parallels," he said. "Her humor is one of her great strengths.

"I also admire the fact that she can produce great art on both a large and small scale," Brown said.

Patrick Taddy, graduate student in ceramics, also is a fan of Warashina's work.

"I have a lot of respect for her as an artist," he said. "She has integrity and perseverance."

Taddy said he also likes how she has continued to grow and change throughout the period.

"It's nice to see someone enlarging their range and changing their work," he said.

Joe Cook, local art teacher, said he enjoys the detail of her work, and how it tells a story.

"Her figures have storytelling abilities," he said. "She gives the illusion that the figures are moving, even though you know they're not."

Brown said he encourages anyone to attend the lecture because Warashina's work is more than purely visual.

"Her work has very human qualities and there is a psychological context to her art that anyone can relate to," Brown said.

Worcester should retain open-mindedness

If two heads are better than one, then the 18 heads involved in the student body presidential election certainly are better than one.

Soon-to-be student body president Jake Worcester — along with incoming vice president Dana Pracht — certainly has some splendid campaign goals he must work to accomplish during his term. However, it is important the pair not narrow their focus to those goals they outlined while campaigning.

So far, Worcester seems to be intent on not only meeting his goals but on searching for and accepting new ones. He has vowed that he and Pracht will keep an open mind, listen to student concerns and ideas and strive to respond to those concerns and ideas.

Worcester said his campaign goals will be his top priority as student body president. They should, indeed, be his main pursuit. After all, he was elected based on those ideas.

But he also said he and Pracht have begun to incorporate some of the ideas of other candidates into their upcoming term.

To begin with, Worcester said he has met with administration to discuss former runoff opponent Jesse McCurry's pride-building proposals. He said he has examined ways to improve both Purple Power Play on Poyntz and Wildcat Welcome Week.

In addition, he said he intends to examine graduate teaching assistant standards and quality. This topic was a campaign issue of several former candidates, one Worcester said is important to him and many students on campus.

Another issue of importance to Worcester and several of his former opponents — representation at the Kansas Board of Regents — remains high on his list of priorities.

Finally, Worcester and Pracht already have begun to make efforts to increase diversity in student government. Pracht met with Hispanic American Leadership Organization and Black Student Union members

recently to discuss positions in Worcester's cabinet.

Diversity, an issue addressed by former presidential candidate Jeremy Claeys, will remain an important issue for some time.

Thus far, Worcester and Pracht have displayed a willingness to remain open-minded about their campaign goals.

If they are to have a successful term, they must continue to listen, expand and accomplish their list of goals.

Graduate empathizes with treatment of cadet

Editor,

The column by Angela Kistner, regarding her boyfriend's recent experience as an ROTC cadet, brought back memories of my undergraduate years that, to my knowledge, I have never shared with anyone.

In 1971, during the fall term of my sophomore year, I joined the Air Force ROTC unit here at K-State. The times were different for a uniformed cadet on campus, as the war in Vietnam still was raging. I clearly recall the first time I was spat upon in the K-State Student Union. I was proud of my decision. I knew that many of my friends in the College of Architecture thought I was crazy and that some would turn against me, yet I was determined to see being a cadet through. I take the freedom of speech and assembly seriously, even though it was painful for me to encounter the differences in opinion so directly.

Some of the members of my squadron avoided the Union, as well as other areas of campus, like the plague when they were in uniform. I never did and continued to experience difficulties every now and again from some members of the student body. The experiences I had caused me to grow and develop a perspective and inner confidence about my decisions I might not have had I not experienced that scorn and derision. I freely will admit, however, that it was with no small pleasure when I watched that area of the Union where people could "hide" in small, insular groups be demolished during the recent renovation. The new openness of the dining area will always mean something just a little different for me than it will for others.

My philosophy of architectural planning and design has been to open up spaces and to bring people, activity and places together. On a college campus, we should celebrate the differences in background, sex, race, creed and outlook we all bring with us. Never doubt that the small, insignificant actions each of us take towards others can have an effect no one anticipates at the time.

One last thing: The person who spat on me later became a client and a good friend. We just don't share the same perspective on the war in Vietnam, even to this day. Yet, we have grown beyond our differences.

Get with the times,

Secret-agent series remains popular with viewers despite unrealistic content, characters

Bond, James Bond.

This cunning yet sophisticated secret agent of Her Majesty's Secret Service has been thrilling audiences worldwide for nearly four decades with his trademark Walther PPK and his martinis slightly shaken ... but not stirred. Additionally, over the years, the Bond name has become synonymous with high-tech gadgets, beautiful women, deadly spies and action-packed, death-defying adventure.

Due to the effective use of this formula, it is estimated that 50 percent of the world's population has at least heard of James Bond and that 25 percent has seen at least one Bond film.

For the most part, the world of James Bond has remained largely unchanged since the release of "Dr. No" in 1962. Despite the reunification of Germany, the collapse of the Soviet Bloc and the recent rise of political correctness, Bond has maintained his status as a cultural icon.

But why? Since the end of the Cold War, the romanticism of being a spy has begun to wear off, and for the most part spies have become mere relics of the past. Additionally, men from around the world quickly are realizing that the era of the sexist dinosaur has passed and the era of girl power has begun.

Well, let's imagine for a moment, if you will, a more realistic and politically correct James Bond. Gone would be the dry vodka martinis, the incompetent villains and the disposable high-tech gadgets. Instead, this new Bond would drink Evian bottled water, no longer would have access to an unlimited budget and would face villains who actually possess I.Q.s larger than their shoe sizes.

In this new Bond world, Bond soon would find himself in jail facing countless sexual harassment charges and numerous paternity lawsuits. He would have every sexually transmitted disease known to man, including a few that are not, and be the father of enough children to populate a small country. And for the first time, one of Bond's sexual advances actually would be rejected by a Bond Girl.

The usual plethora of abnormally beautiful Bond Girls — such as Denise Richards and Teri Hatcher — would be replaced by the girls next door, who actually reflect the majority of women found within society. Additionally, the Bond Girls no longer would be cast to play the normal moronic bimbo roles of the past — like Mary Goodnight and Bibi Dahl. Instead, they would have roles with a little more substance. As a result, the seductive opening credits would have to be done away with, as well as the underlying sexual themes that underscore every film. Every gun would have to be registered and fitted with a trigger lock so criminals and children couldn't use them. To alleviate possibly volatile situations, Bond first would try to negotiate before ever using physical force. Lastly, Bond actually would obey his superiors and not go off mission to fulfill a personal vendetta.

So why has Bond remained a cultural icon? Well, it's because of everything that makes him Bond.

Men idolize Bond because he is the embodiment of everything they would like to be. They envy Bond's ability to attract hundreds of beautiful, willing women without any of the commitment, travel to far off exotic places and to use the high-tech gadgets developed by Q-Branch.

On the other hand, to women, who swoon at the sound of Bond's burly voice, he embodies everything they want in a man. They long to be swept off their feet by a gallant and sophisticated gentleman who knows how to treat them like ladies — which is exactly what Bond does every time he encounters a beautiful young lady.

Despite all of his vices — vodka martinis, fast driving, casinos and beautiful women — Bond remains a cultural icon because he lives the lifestyle everyone dreams of but no one can have.

That is why, like diamonds, James Bond is forever.

Quest for college degree should not overshadow importance of life experiences

An education is supposed to make one more intelligent.

Earning a college degree is indeed a prestigious accomplishment, yet there is something far more important than any test or any paper you ever will embark on.

That one element is somewhat broad: life. When you are in college, it is all too easy to get wrapped up in the demands of the syllabus. As a self-proclaimed academic-excellence perfectionist, this theory of school not being everything is somewhat new to me.

It took a tragic event in my life to change my priorities around. Last Easter, my family had a large gathering. The pressure of graduating with honors at my community college was lurking over my head. So instead of visiting with my family, time was spent on the almighty homework. At the time it seemed to be of the utmost importance. Yet now I cannot recall even which subject this homework was in.

With my head in a book, I only spoke to my relatives in between chapters or questions. While this was happening, life was going on, and I was missing it.

When the evening meal was finished, I couldn't bring myself to put down the books to walk our guests to the door. One of the guests was my aunt, who had been battling cancer for over a decade. This was one of the last times I ever would see her.

For years prior to her death on my never-ending to-do list was the project of writing her a card expressing my feelings. One day I finally put down my summer school homework and wrote her a letter.

At 7:45 on a Sunday evening, the letter was mailed. At 7:50 on that same hot July evening, her battle ended when her lungs drew their final breath and her caring heart beat one final time.

I graduated with honors, but that gladly would be taken back if it meant that more attention to life would be paid.

An education will grant you with more opportunities than anything else. But if you let a test, a mid-term exam, or a class dictate your life, those same opportunities will not be as successful. Some students think their grade point average is the single most important element of their college life. Granted, it is important, but not to the extent of living in a library or with your head forever engaged in a book.

When I think back on my college experiences, it is unlikely that I will remember the different environmental conditions associated with various locations. It also is unlikely that the honor code will be recited at will.

Instead, I want to remember the time I spent with my friends on spring break in Florida on the beach. Forget mathematics formulas — let me recall the afternoons the sunset has been viewed on the back of a motorcycle by Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Life is too short not to enjoy an occasional afternoon listening to Jimmy Buffet or drinking a Bud Light fishing by the lake.

Do what it takes to succeed in the classroom, but always bear in mind that grades and the almighty diploma are not everything.

"I used to go crazy for days at a time, now I'm takin' my time with my days. Haven't found the answers like some that I know I'm just stuck in a fairly nice maze." — Jimmy Buffet

Married-couple tax-cut bill moves to Senate

■ Finance Committee approved $248 million, 10-year bill Thursday.

By CURT ANDERSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Millions of married couples would get $248 billion in tax cuts over 10 years under Republican legislation approved Thursday by the Senate Finance Committee.

"Not only does it reduce families' tax burden, it eliminates some of the most egregious examples of unfairness and complexity in the tax code today," said the panel's chairman, Sen. William Roth, R-Del. "This bill is fair, this bill is responsible and this bill is pro-family."

Included in those who would get tax cuts are the 25 million married couples who pay higher taxes than if they were single.

The bill, much broader than a 10-year, $182 billion House-passed version, is expected to reach the Senate floor by mid-April, prior to the federal income tax filing deadline.

President Clinton has threatened to veto the House version because it would consume too much of the projected budget surplus, and Democrats said the same fate would befall the Senate bill.

"It will not be signed into law," said Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y. "We surely support the principle. We have serious reservations about the costs involved."

The Finance Committee approved the measure on an 11-9 party-line vote, including a change from the original version sought by GOP conservatives that would adjust the 28-percent tax rate gradually so it applies to more of a married couple's income.

The bill would do the same to the 15-percent bracket, as would the House version.

Under law, two people who are married and have roughly equal incomes pay income taxes at higher rates in both the 15-percent and 28-percent brackets than they would if they were single. About 25 million couples nationwide are affected by the tax code's marriage penalty, while millions more get a bonus when one spouse earns most of the income.

Democrats said the GOP bill is too broad because it cuts income taxes for couples in both groups — more than half the bill's relief would go to couples who already get bonuses — rather than focusing solely on those who pay a marriage penalty.

"Sadly, this is a political statement," Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont. said.

Republicans countered that all families deserve help, given the size of the projected budget surplus.

"It is meaningful relief to a group of Americans who really need it," Sen. Paul Coverdell, R-Ga., said.

The Senate bill also would raise the income cutoff by $2,500 for lower-income couples who claim the earned-income tax credit, up from $2,000 in the original bill and the House measure. This change was suggested by Sen. Jim Jeffords, R-Vt.

In addition, it would raise the standard deduction for married couples gradually to twice that of single filers and permanently ensure that taxpayers who claim middle-class credits, such as the $500 per-child tax credit, do not become ensnared in the alternative minimum tax.

Democrats on the Finance Committee failed to win approval of an alternative by Moynihan that eventually would have allowed couples the choice of filing their income taxes as singles or as a married couple.

Senators warn of inmate lawsuit due to crowding

By JOHN HANNA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Some senators, frustrated with what they see as a lack of progress on prison crowding issues, are warning that Kansas could face another lawsuit from inmates.

Corrections Secretary Charles Simmons said Thursday that such a lawsuit is a remote possibility if legislators don't act, as he thinks they will, on prison issues this year.

Raising the possibility of a new lawsuit were Senate President Dick Bond and Senate Ways and Means Chairman Dave Kerr.

They said they want the House to consider prison proposals Kerr drafted.

"We're hopeful that the House will be cooperative in what we're trying to do," Bond, R-Overland Park, said. "But I don't have a lot of confidence."

Bond and Kerr, R-Hutchinson, made their comments during the Senate's debate on a bill financing state construction projects, which received first-round approval on a voice vote. The House also gave first-round approval to its version on a voice vote.

Gov. Bill Graves proposed spending $17.3 million to expand state prisons in Topeka and outside El Dorado. But legislators want to find less expensive alternatives.

Kerr's plan would create three day-reporting centers and modify criminal sentencing laws to prevent nonviolent former inmates from returning to prison for violating the terms of their paroles or releases.

The House Appropriations Committee deferred all decisions until the end of the Legislature's session. What's more, last week, the House rejected a sentencing bill crucial to Kerr's plan.

"This issue is going to be debated up until the last minute," Appropriations Chairman David Adkins, R-Leawood, said.

A 1977 lawsuit by inmates against the Department of Corrections over living conditions led to five orders from a federal judge over two years, culminating in a 1989 order setting the capacity of each prison. The judge closed the case in 1996.

The state's inmate population has continued to grow over the past year, and it had 8,709 prisoners in its custody as of Wednesday. The Department of Corrections has space for 8,877 inmates.

Bond said a lawsuit can happen again.

Simmons said: "They have two options — build more space or tell me who to let go. Doing nothing is not an option."

Senate Minority Leader Anthony Hensley added an amendment to the capital improvements bill. It would prevent Graves' administration from issuing bonds for prison construction without a review of each project by the Legislature's Joint Committee on State Building Construction.

Republicans expressed concern about handcuffing the department, especially in a crisis. Hensley's restriction would apply after the Legislature adjourns.

Hensley said he offered the amendment to put pressure on the House to act on Kerr's plan.

House members added their own restrictions — tougher than Hensley's — on its improvements bill. It would require approval by the Legislature for selected prison projects.

"We sent a message to ourselves," Adkins said.

Mock-residence hall room gives prospective students glance at K-State life; halls offer welcoming activities

By BEN HOPPER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The All-University Open House is an opportunity to see where and how students are living on campus, said Derek Jackson, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services.

A mock-residence hall room will be set up at the K-State Student Union, where students and staff will answer questions about the residence halls. Guided and non-guided tours will take place throughout the day.

Dave Woodruff, Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls president, said the tours give visitors a feel of residence hall life.

"They're a great place to live,"

Woodruff said. "It's a great experience and a way to meet new people."

Kyle Barscewski and Jessica Kopecky, co-student coordinators, organized open house activities for all the residence halls.

The theme is "A Million Dollar Opportunity," said Barscewski, sophomore in operations management and marketing.

"Each hall took the initiative to have its own activities," he said.

"Visitors then can get a feel of that hall's atmosphere."

Amy Putnam, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications, said West Hall is illustrating perks that only residents experience.

"Each floor will represent a different aspect of dorm life, showcasing the advantages of living in a residence hall."

— Amy Putnam, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications will be portrayed by residents.

Todd Clark, Haymaker Hall residence life coordinator, said Haymaker has an original event this year to raise money for the Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan Inc.

A Haymaker residence assistant will be on the roof above Haymaker's front steps at 1:30 p.m. today.

"If we raise more than $500, the residence assistant will stay on the roof until his first class on Monday," Clark said.

Contributions can be made at the hall, he said.

Clark said he encourages everyone to check out what the residence halls have to offer.

"We're proud of our residence halls," Clark said.

"It's one of the best housing facilities in the country," he said.

report back within 90 days.

The full Board of Trustees was having its regular monthly meeting Thursday and today at South Bend but was not expected to discuss Knight.

"What they find will dictate the direction their investigation will take," Simpson said. "At this point they're not ruling out anything, but clearly the review will not ebb and flow based on the latest sensational story of the day about coach Knight."

Knight and Doninger did not answer requests for comment Thursday by The Associated Press.

The Star reported that Knight was pacing in the hallway outside the Hoosiers' locker room in Assembly Hall after an 82-71 loss to Ohio State on Feb. 19.

Doninger stopped by to talk with the team and tried to console Knight, saying something like "tough loss," The Star said, quoting Dr. Brad Bomba Sr., a longtime team doctor and friend of both men.

"What would you know about it?" Knight said, according to Bomba. The coach then ordered Doninger to leave. Doninger refused and the two exchanged heated words for about two minutes.

Bomba said he got between Knight and Doninger to defuse the situation. He said he also pushed away Knight's son, assistant coach Pat Knight, when the younger Knight tried to step into the conflict.

Bomba said Bob Knight was concerned afterward.

"He said, 'Well, did I do anything that was threatening?' I said, 'No, you argued with him,'" Bomba said. "And he said, 'Well, they're trying to make the fact up that I hit him or I tried to push him, or I did something of that nature.'"

Bomba said he didn't know details of any disagreements between Knight and Doninger, but Knight has been critical of the low pay received by some of his staff.

The latest report follows claims recently by two former players that Knight assaulted his players during practices.

Reed said Knight choked him during a 1997 practice and also ordered Brand, the university president, to leave a practice. Knight and Brand have denied the claims.

In another report, former player Ricky Calloway said Knight punched Steve Alford and slapped Darryl Thomas. Both former players say that never happened.

Meanwhile, the student newspaper on the Bloomington campus called this week for an independent investigation into Knight.

"An independent investigator's findings would be more readily accepted by the public and the media," the Indiana Daily Student wrote in an editorial published Monday. "There would be no agenda, nothing at stake. An investigation free of implications is best for all involved."

MTBE, which is a known soil and water polluter, is beginning to give way to other additives, and the KFB greatly would benefit from producing ethanol at local centers, she said.

Parker said the one thing that has been keeping ethanol from replacing MTBE before now was the cost of producing it.

"Ethanol is expensive to produce, but it is certainly competitive now, with gas prices rising," Parker said.

Connie Fischer, director of agricultural product development for the Kansas Department of Agriculture, said that with gas prices as they are now, ethanol finally will be able to compete.

"When gas prices were low, there was concern that ethanol would increase the price of fuel at the pump," Fischer said.

Fischer said the industry understands it needs to be competitive, and many farming cooperatives are looking at building production facilities in their towns.

She also said switching to ethanol would provide a big boost to Kansas farmers and ranchers.

"The opening of California to ethanol would double consumption, and if the New England states switch, it could possibly even triple," Fischer said.

Right now, the KFB is working to get the word out through both state and federal governments and working with Congress and other groups, she said.

Ethanol also might reduce our dependence on foreign oil, Fischer said. Ethanol can be used in both foreign or domestic fuel, but changing to a local renewable resource would reduce our dependence of foreign additives, she said.

"As time goes on, it will decrease the need for foreign oil products," Fischer said.

Clark said that because corn and milo are both in abundance in Kansas, it would not hurt the food industry to switch over some production for ethanol.

Fischer said she agreed, because corn and milo aren't the only crops that can be used.

"Green sorghum is used more in Kansas than corn, so we do have an abundant supply or feed stock to use in ethanol products," she said.

empty outdoor ashtrays.

"Our landscapers keep (the campus) in a pristine condition. The only sore spot we've got is this cigarette litter," said Paul Ruskin of the Penn State campus maintenance office.

The idea of a campuswide ban was broached by student government leaders following a meeting with school officials last December.

The plan also drew impassioned opposition from many students.

"I implore all that value their freedom, both smokers and non-smokers, to have their voices heard on this," one student, Rick Sollman, wrote in Wednesday's issue of the Daily Collegian newspaper. "Today, send the university a message. Tell them that you are fed up with the attitude that they are our parents."

Other students questioned whether the university would be able to enforce it.

At least one school already has such a policy: Harding University in Searcy, Ark., has long barred the use or possession of tobacco among students.

Many other schools are smoke-free inside.

community organizations because they have access to funds outside of K-State. To qualify as a student organization, the group must be 80 percent students.

However, Carlton Getz, allocations chair, said he wanted to maintain continuity and that the proposal was an unreasonable method of funding.

Getz said both groups should be provided with funding, and that a university-community organization would receive pro-rated allocations depending on how many students were in the group. This bill passed.

In another bill, Attorney General Amie Kershner said it should be illegal for students to take, sell or distribute notes. It would be up to individual professors to file complaints, she said.

"They're not real excited about you selling their notes on the Internet," she said.

Another bill addressed the concern regarding runoff elections.

Petrik said there are low voter turnouts, and to solve this problem, students should be able to vote on the Tuesday and Wednesday of the week before spring break.

During open period, Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, and Daryl Youngman, assistant professor at Hale Library, said they're interested in creating focus groups to meet with consultants and talk about how the library and its resources could be improved.

Pentagon sending more Army troops to Kosovo

By ROBERT BURNS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Pentagon said Thursday it is sending an extra 125 Army soldiers to Kosovo to help monitor a border area in southern Serbia where Albanians have been accused of provoking Serb forces.

Spokesman Kenneth Bacon said Defense Secretary William Cohen also ordered the Army to send 14 tanks and six 155 mm artillery guns to a 1st Armored Division company in Skopje, Macedonia — just across the border from Kosovo — as a deterrent to activity in southern Serbia.

The 1st Armored Division unit has been in Skopje since January without its normal set of tanks and artillery. Bacon said he could not immediately explain why they had been sent there without the weapons.

The moves reflect a growing American and NATO concern about the potential for a flare-up of ethnic violence in the Presevo Valley, a predominantly ethnic Albanian area adjacent to Kosovo. Just two days ago, the State Department expressed disappointment that Kosovo Albanian militia groups have failed to live up to a commitment made earlier this month to end an insurgency in that section of southern Serbia.

On Thursday, the State Department warned the Albanians in Kosovo to avoid provocative acts in that area.

"Rest assured that our antenna are up," spokesman James B. Foley said. "We are going to be very vigilant. And we are prepared to act."

Extremist Albanians are accused of storing weapons and provoking the Serbs. Earlier this month, U.S.

peacekeepers, who are responsible for southeastern Kosovo, launched raids to seized Albanian arms.

Bacon said the tanks and artillery headed for Macedonia would provide U.S. troops there with an extra measure of self-protection, and enable the troops to conduct their normal training with a full set of weapons.

"It (also) will serve as a deterrent to any mischief that might take place along the borders of Macedonia," Bacon said.

Both new deployments — the tanks and artillery as well as the soldiers — were requested by Brig. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, commander of U.S. peacekeeping forces in Kosovo, Bacon said.

The deployment of 125 extra Army soldiers is designed to provide more eyes and ears in the Presevo Valley area, Bacon said.

"If they see things along the border that require investigation by people on foot, it's these men and women who will provide the duty investigating," he said. "They're basically foot soldiers. And as I say, they operate as eyes and ears for Brigadier General Sanchez and his troops, and they'll be patrolling in the border area."

Bacon said the 125 soldiers are to remain in Kosovo for about six months. They will work in conjunction with pilotless reconnaissance aircraft that are being dispatched to improve surveillance along border areas.

The United States and its NATO allies bombed Serbia last year to force Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic to withdraw troops and special police from Kosovo where they were accused of brutalizing secession-minded ethnic Albanians.

Economic strength helps nation's retirement programs

By ALICE ANN LOVE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Thanks to the strong economy, Medicare will have an additional eight years, until 2023, before cash runs short to pay benefits to aging baby boomers. And Social Security will remain financially healthy an extra three years, until 2037, trustees of the programs said Thursday.

"The fundamental shortfall still does exist, but the good news is that the problem is a little bit more manageable," said Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers, who serves as trustee along with other administration officials and two private experts.

President Clinton took credit for the progress during a visit to a senior citizens' center in Queens, N.Y.

"This means the commitment to fiscal discipline and good government can make a difference to families," Clinton said.

Administration officials tried to retain a note of sobriety, reminding that the huge baby-boom generation — those born between 1946 and 1964 — will be retiring well into the 2020s and living longer in retirement than their parents.

"It would be a mistake, a big mistake, I believe to kick the can 20 years down the road," by delaying reforms, Social Security Commissioner Kenneth S. Apfel said.

On Capitol Hill, however, the good news prompted Republicans to renew attacks on Clinton's proposals to commit future income tax surpluses to bolster the nation's retirement programs.

"Instead of that failed approach, we should work on a real plan that saves Social Security and creates personal savings accounts for all Americans," said House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Bill Archer, R-Texas.

In recent years, a looming financial crunch had prompted a frenzy of reform ideas. Even before Thursday's report, the prospects for fundamental Medicare and Social Security changes this election year were dim, with members of Congress loathe to compromise.

There was little talk of large-scale reform Thursday. Nevertheless, Democrats renewed their call to add new prescription drug benefits to Medicare.

"There is no excuse now for inaction on prescription drugs,"

Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., said.

This is the third consecutive year that both Social Security and Medicare have shown improvement in their long-range financial outlook.

For Medicare, it was the best report card in 25 years. The health-insurance program for the elderly and disabled had been projected to run short of cash in 2001, lending urgency to lawmakers' struggle over historic legislation to balance the federal budget in 1997.

Last year, trustees reported that date had improved to 2015. It was moved to 2023 in their newest estimate Thursday.

CONGRATULATIONS ERIK KLAHN

Erik Klahn is a graduating student in chemical engineering. Leaving Kansas State University in May, Erik will begin his new career for Archer Daniels Midland Company. Erik will be working in BioProducts in Decatur, Illinois.

ADM is the world's largest agri-processing company and is based in Decatur, Illinois. ADM is continuing to expand throughout North America as well as in China, Europe, and South America.

ADM processes corn, soybeans and other oil seeds and produces high fructose corn syrup, citric acid, Vitamin C, Vitamin E, TVP, vegetable oil, lecithin, ethanol, as well as many other products.

Erik found out about ADM's career opportunities from career services and scheduled an interview with ADM. He interviewed in Decatur, toured production facilities, and was then hired as a production assistant.

Erik will begin training for a period of six to twelve months. During this time he will work with different technicians and engineers as well as learn about the entire process of production at the plant. He wanted the chance to have hands-on experience. Erik is eagerly awaiting his new career at ADM.

We look forward to Erik joining us.

Welcome to ADM.

Bird House

Kelly Joe Phelps performs Saturday night at art center

The man plays with the guitar face-up in his lap.

It's not because he didn't learn how to play it properly — after all, the man is Kelly Joe Phelps.

He's been playing the guitar like this since the age of 30, and he's released three albums since 1994.

Phelps will be performing at 8 p.m.
Saturday at the Manhattan Arts Center as part of the BirdHouse Concert Series.

"He's a phenomenal blues musician," David Kameron, BirdHouse co-founder, said.

"It's a rare opportunity to get close to somebody like this."

Phelps started attracting audiences in Portland, Ore., and after he released his first album, his popularity grew.

He's been to London and has been featured in The New York Times, The Japan Times and Acoustic Guitar magazine.

Kameron started contacting him a year ago and said the effort was well worth it.

"He fills the stories not just with music, but with spirit as well," he said.
"The BirdHouse is very intimate, and the performer has the opportunity to draw in the audience and make it very spellbinding. It's a quiet contemplative blues laced with the spiritual."

Crissan Zeigler, Manhattan Arts Center program director, said BirdHouse is attracting bigger and bigger names.

People should come see Phelps because his music has an emotional depth and mingles the three musical traditions of folk, jazz and blues, she said.

"Anyone who is familiar with and loves those three musical legacies will be thrilled to see them brought together in a modern, very new mingling of the sounds," she said.

"He's a preserver of the emotional spontaneity of blues while incorporating the freedom of folk and jazz."

The BirdHouse first began five years ago, when three K-State faculty members got together.

They wanted to see good music in Manhattan, said Steve Martini, associate director of recreational series and a BirdHouse co-founder.

"If someone hasn't been to a BirdHouse concert, they miss seeing a quality artist in a friendly, warm environment," he said.

Martini said he's excited about Phelps' concert because it's one artist telling his story.

"We're lucky enough to have him come," he said. "He's quite a musician as well as a singer."

It's just different from the normal type of music you listen to.

If you like new folk music, this is more gutsy, more earthy and more emotional."

Phelps is touring the Midwest this week, performing between three and four shows and providing his audience with songs from his two newest albums,

"Roll Away the Stone" and "Shine Eyed Mr. Zen."

He's been heaped with critical praise and has won Blues Album of the Year again and again, Zeigler said.

"He discovered the blues to fill an emotional void in his music," she said.

"This performance Saturday night will have people totally absorbed in his performance, leaving feeling the whole gamut of emotions that blues, jazz and folk can bring out in one."

Kameron said people should come and see Phelps because his songs have a really spiritual sound and a lot of imagery about salvation.

"There will be a lot of lovers in the audience," he said.

Local band to perform at benefit concert

Some recent changes have made the band Binge more available to fans in the Manhattan area.

Binge has been together for almost three years and is made of four members.

Getting the band together was difficult because two of the members did not live in the Manhattan area, Ben Schardein, guitar and lead vocalist, said.

"Initially it took a lot of effort to get us all together at once because of geographical reasons, but in the last year we have been playing in Manhattan regularly," Schardein said.

"We finally created a show in which we feel comfortable and also receive positive audience reaction."

The band recently added a new bass player.

"Jay Machiela came to us from the band Knee Deep, and we have had nothing but a great time together," Schardein said. "Whereas it is sometimes difficult to adjust to new members, he has just really clicked with the rest of us."

The band is one of the groups participating in the second Skatepark
Benefit Show at 7 tonight at Pottorf Hall in CoCo Park.

The Skatepark Benefit Show also features three other local bands and a live disc jockey.

Skeebo, Crooked Pinky and 7-
Minute Abs will add to the entertainment for the benefit.

The profits of the show will go toward the building of a new skate park in Manhattan.

"We are playing in this show to show support for the cause as well as to mesh with some of the younger bands that do not have the chance to play to the same audiences that we do because of age,"

Schardein said.

The event is an all-ages show coordinated by some of the members of a local high school band and other supporters hoping for a new skate park to be built.

"This is a great opportunity to expose our work to a different age group of listeners," Machiela, Binge's bass player, said. "Since it is an all-ages show, we get to perform for high school age students and give them the chance to hear the same music that is available to college age students in the bars."

Binge has expanded its schedule to include the north central Kansas area, as well as Nebraska.

"We have been playing in Manhattan enough at bars such as Auntie Mae's
Parlor and Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon that people are able to give us feedback on how our playing is going," Machiela said.

"Our next show will actually be at Auntie Mae's on April 20. We are playing with the Pemberton's, and our part of the show will be a tribute to the band TruckStopLove."

Binge has a song, "USA Dead," off its demo compact disc on the up-and-coming TruckStopLove album. The band has become a part of the off-night shows that Auntie Mae's began last year.

"Last spring, we started having more and more local bands playing on Tuesday and Wednesday nights," Jeff Denney, manager of Auntie Mae's, said.

"Binge is one of those bands that we have seen grow in the last year."

"They seem to be concentrating more on giving a really entertaining performance," he said. "Where money is usually a larger issue for bands, Binge replaces with audience and inter-band satisfaction."

Army officer claims sexual harassment

By ROBERT BURNS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Army is investigating a complaint by its most senior female officer that she was sexually harassed by a fellow general, defense officials said Thursday.

The accusation was made by Lt. Gen. Claudia Kennedy, 52, the Army's deputy chief of staff for intelligence.

She is the first female three-star general in the history of the Army and is due to retire this summer.

Army officials refused to comment on the matter, saying it was Army policy not to discuss an ongoing investigation.

Defense Secretary William Cohen's spokesman, Kenneth Bacon, also refused to comment.

Maj. Gen. John G. Meyer Jr., the chief Army spokesman, said he could not confirm that Kennedy had filed a complaint of sexual harassment.

Meyer said Kennedy had informed his office that she would not comment.

The matter first was reported in Thursday's editions of the Washington Times, which said it had not learned the identity of the accused general.

The Times did not say when Kennedy lodged her complaint, but said the allegation stemmed from an incident in her Pentagon office in October 1996 when she was a two-star major general and was in the post of assistant deputy chief of Army intelligence.

The newspaper quoted an unidentified Army source as saying Kennedy accused the general of inappropriate touching.

The Times said the Defense Department inspector general's office was investigating the accusation and had interviewed people who were on Kennedy's staff in 1996.

Susan Hansen, a Pentagon spokeswoman, said the Defense Department inspector general's office was not investigating the matter.

Other defense officials, who spoke to The Associated Press on condition they not be identified, said the investigation was in the care of the Army's own inspector general.

The Times said a former officer told its reporter that he was interviewed by the accused general's defense lawyer, who asked him about Kennedy's demeanor on a certain October date in 1996 and about her office layout.

Kennedy, who is not married, is a career intelligence officer.

In 1997 she served on a special task force that examined the problem of sexual harassment in the Army and concluded that it existed throughout the Army, crossing gender, rank and racial lines.

In an October 1997 interview published in USA Weekend, Kennedy said she had experienced sexual harassment in the Army and she spoke at length about how she and other women should respond to it.

The interviewer asked her how she dealt with it when she was younger. "I dealt with it individually," she said.

"I just said 'no' in the way I needed to say 'no,' and there were times when I had to say 'no' very forcefully."

"I can remember making an absolute threat to someone that if he ever did this to me, or said it or made me even think he was about to, I would be taking him in to see the person that was pretty high up in our chain (of command). So, you have to come back like that sometimes."

In the interview, she made no specific reference to having been harassed as a general, but she said men had made passes at her.

"But a pass is different from harassment," she said.

"What's illegitimate is when you work for him, or he works for you, one of you is married and not to each other."

Kennedy also spoke about the difficulty of responding to acts of touching that may not be immediately recognizable as harassment.

"If you say something immediately, it's very likely he will back off and say you've misunderstood," she said.

"All of a sudden you're the problem, not him."

But if you hang back, he'll do it longer and more inappropriately."

Study says firearms unsecure in homes

By BART JONES
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — One-third of U.S. homes with children have at least one firearm and nearly half of them keep the weapons unsecured, a study found.

Forty-three percent of such homes kept one or more guns in an unlocked place and without trigger locks, and guns were kept loaded as well as unlocked in 9 percent, according to researchers at Rand Corp. and the University of California, Los Angeles.

The findings underscore the need to make adults more aware that firearms are accessible to many children and that they need to keep the weapons out of their hands, said Dr. Mark A. Schuster, a UCLA pediatrician and the study's lead author.

The study, released Thursday, was reported in the April issue of the American Journal of Public Health, a publication of the American Public Health Association.

The issue of children's access to guns has become a national focus as schools repeatedly become scenes of violence, ranging from the killings at Columbine High School in Colorado last year to a 6-year-old shooting a classmate in Michigan last month.

The study used information from interviews of 45,435 households for the 1994 National Health Interview Survey and additional questioning of 19,374 of those households in a supplement that included a section covering firearms, Schuster said. The surveys were administered by the National Center for Health Statistics.

Firearms are present in 35 percent of U.S. homes with children — representing more than 11 million homes with more than 22 million children younger than age 18, according to the study.

The 9 percent of those homes that keep firearms unlocked and loaded would translate into homes with 1.7 million children, researchers found. Another 4 percent of the homes have guns that are unlocked and with ammunition stored nearby.

"Thus, a total of about 13 percent of homes — about 1.4 million homes with about 2.6 million children — had firearms stored in a manner most accessible to children," the report said.

Just 39 percent of homes with firearms had them locked, unloaded and stored separately from ammunition, it said.

Schuster said in an interview that while school shootings make clear the need to limit children's access to firearms, there are promising signs.

Smith & Wesson, the nation's largest gun manufacturer, has agreed to provide external safety locks on all its handguns within 60 days and internal locks within two years.

"The fact that at least one major gun manufacturer is going to be building safer firearms is good news," Schuster said. "But it's still the responsibility of parents and other adults to keep firearms out of their children's hands."

National Rifle Association lobbyist James J. Baker said he was not surprised by the study and he cited National Safety Council data showing gun accidents at an all-time low.

WHAT'S GOING ON

Getting around

Walking tours leave from the K-State Student Union every half hour. Go to the campus tours information booth to join a tour.

Shuttles will leave from the south side of the Union and will stop at Justin Hall, the Derby Complex, the Vet Med Complex, the Rec Complex, West Stadium and the southeast campus parking lot across from Aggieville.

Events/exhibits

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art will display the works of K-State and the Norwich School of Art and Design faculty.

Out-of-state prospective students and parents can attend an informational reception at 11 a.m. in the UMB Theater at the Beach art museum.

Hale Library tours are available every half hour from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. There also is a book sale.

Get autographs from Willie the Wildcat and K-State football, volleyball and basketball players. Talk with cheerleaders and Classy Cats. 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Union.

A variety show presents top performers and groups from area high schools. Performances near Holtz Hall.

Learn more about leadership studies at the Music, Madness and Miracle Grow event. The Leadership House, on the east side of campus at 914 N. Manhattan Ave, will have music, prizes and leadership activities. Walk to the house, or grab a ride in the leadership limo (4-passenger golf carts) from the east side of the Union on the top of each hour.

Willie the Wildcat, the Taco Bell chihuahua, the Chick-fil-A cow and other mascots will roam the campus all day.

Campus Crusade for Christ will sponsor a barbecue from 4 to 6 p.m. Saturday north of Haymaker Hall. The meal is $1.

Weekend events to demonstrate K-State's strengths

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All-University Open House helps portray the essence of K-State — a university for and by the students, said Dennis Wilson, assistant dean of arts and sciences.

The opportunity for the colleges and the departments within those colleges to show what they do and the accomplishments of their students to the public, alumni, current and prospective students is a great advantage, Wilson said.

"This is not only a fun time, but offers an educational component as well," Wilson said. "It gives the opportunity for incoming students to see what is going on at K-State in one day. It also allows students, both current and prospective, to speak to others in various departments and disciplines to find out more information."

Each of the nine colleges, including K-State-Salina, will be having various activities throughout the day ranging from an insect feed and free doughnuts from the College of Agriculture to a petting zoo at the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Open house is 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday at both the Manhattan and Salina campuses.

Ray Hightower, assistant dean of engineering, said engineering's festivities begin Friday with a parade through campus. He said the parade will begin at King Hall and travel past Anderson Hall to the front steps of Seaton Hall.

He said students will perform two-minute skits and the person who exhibits the most creativity and enthusiasm will win the Gold Brick Award.

"We believe our open house greatly benefits the engineering students," Hightower said. "It becomes an educational activity because of all the work and learning that goes into building and creating the displays to present to the public. It involves all of the course work and skills the students have learned at K-State."

Engineering also will present last year's solar car, which won ninth place at Sunrayce last summer, a mini baja car and a Formula-1 car for visitors to see. Hightower said all of these cars were designed and built by students for national competitions.

The Steel Ring Professional Engineering Honor Society also is sponsoring a Rube Goldberg contest in which high school students design and build an eight-step contraption that will pop a balloon. The American Society of Civil Engineers will be sponsoring a contest for high school students to construct a balsa wood bridge.

Hightower said displays from all of the departments in the College of Engineering will be open to the public on both Friday evening and during the day on Saturday.

Larry Erpelding, associate dean of agriculture and academic programs, said one of the long-running, popular events for open house is the Little American Royal. He said the event, which will be at 1 p.m. in Weber Arena, is a livestock showmanship contest that allows students to show university livestock in competition.

Erpelding also said there will be experiment demonstrations in food chemistry and food microbiology in Call Hall. He said a new event this year is Aggie Avenue. This will be located along Claflin and Mid-Campus Drive as a way to direct visitors and students to the many different areas that involve the College of Agriculture.

"The main tent will have the main college displays and will be in front of Umberger Hall," Erpelding said. "It will then direct people along the avenue to Throckmorton, Call and Shellenberger Halls."

Erpelding said the Bakery Science Club will have free fresh-baked doughnuts and fresh bread, and the horticultural conservatory will be open for people to see butterflies and exotic insects. He said open house is a good way for everyone to learn more about the campus and what students work on in their classes.

"This event allows the public to come to campus and learn more about the programs and research that serves society," Erpelding said. "It is important for both the tax payers and prospective students to see what the university does and can offer them."

Wilson said the College of Arts and Sciences' most popular event during open house is the tightrope-walking rats, presented by the Department of Psychology. He also said one of the more intriguing displays this year is from the Department of Chemistry.

The department will bring in a glass blower to give demonstrations throughout the day, and also will give demonstrations where the scent is extracted from flowers.

Wilson said all of the art galleries will be open in Willard Hall, as well as the graphic arts and metal works labs. He said open house gives prospective students as well as current students the opportunity to see what interests them, ask questions and find out what they want to do in their college careers.

"I am looking forward to see all of the displays this year," Wilson said. "The open-option advisers will be available to help people decide on what they want to do or help them relax, so they do not feel they have to make a decision right away."

"With current students here on campus, it will also give those high school students interested in coming to K-State the opportunity to ask questions and make the decision if this university is right for them," he said.

11th annual expo to feature business, home presentations

By STEPHANIE J. BONNELL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan will have its 11th annual all-in-one home, business and outdoors show Saturday and Sunday at the KSU Sports Complex.

The theme for Expo 2000 is "A World Class Event." It will be from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday. Admission is free.

"There will be something there for everyone," said Tina Harland, of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce. "There will be a casting contest where you have the opportunity to win a bass boat or Waverunner package."

There will be more than 98 exhibitors that will feature home and business displays on the concourse of Bramlage Coliseum. The boat, RV and outdoor show will be on the main floor of Bramlage.

In Brandeberry Indoor Complex, there will be 70 exhibitors offering home improvement and remodeling displays.

"There is even an opportunity to win K-State football season tickets being offered by the Manhattan Area Builders," Harland said. "You can register for those at Brandeberry Sports Complex."

The home show is sponsored annually by the Manhattan Area Builders Association. The business and outdoor show is sponsored by the chamber of commerce.

"Kansas State golf coach Tim Norris will offer golf instruction on Saturday," Harland said. "Colbert Hills will have a booth on the Bramlage floor that will give people of any age the opportunity to drive a golf ball."

PREPARATION

Senior Alyne Millsap, graduate student Noel Nevers and junior Valerie Norris, all students in chemical engineering, work Tuesday afternoon on making an entrance for their department for the All-University Open House. "We're tucked back in the corner of Durland Hall, and most people walk through the main part," Norris said. The display, which will be about 12 feet long, will replicate a distillation column, which is used to separate out compounds, Nevers said.

Passport contest to award free books to 1 student for semester

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A passport to different buildings on campus will win one lucky student free books for next semester at Saturday's All-University Open House.

Heath Schroeder, student activities chair and senior in finance and pre-optometry, said prospective K-Staters and current students can pick up a passport at any information booth and then take it to different participating locations and get it stamped. When at least eight stamps are applied, contestants can take the passport to the K-State Student Union Bookstore, where it will be entered into a drawing.

The winner will get next fall's books free.

Schroeder said he thinks this activity will be successful.

"It's free books that can be as much as $500 to $600, depending who wins it," he said. "There is no set amount."

Besides the new passport activity, there are many other activities happening around campus.

Jenny Ziegler, student coordinator for open house and senior in architectural engineering, said there are activities for everyone to enjoy at open house.

The College of Engineering, which changes its activities every year, kicks off open house activities today. At noon, the College of Engineering will have a parade which will run down Mid-Campus Drive and stop between Seaton Hall and the Union, where different departments will have a skit competition. Ziegler said judges then will announce St. Pat and St. Patricia.

The College of Engineering displays will be open from 5:30 to 9 tonight.

As guests walk through campus, they also can walk through a heart at the College of Veterinary Medicine.

"It's supposed to be pretty cool," Ziegler said.

The College of Veterinary Medicine also will have carriage rides from the college to the Union, which takes a scenic route.

"Those are an additional dollar, but everything else is free," Ziegler said.

Ziegler said there will be a lot of activities in the Union, where the College of Arts and Sciences will have booths set up on the ground floor of the Union, including a tightrope-walking rat at the psychology department booth.

"It's supposed to be pretty neat," she said.

Another activity that will be taking place Saturday is a Festival of Breadbaking contest sponsored by the Kansas Wheat Commission, Kansas Wheathearts and the Kansas Department of Commerce and Housing.

Marsha Boswell, public information officer for the Kansas Wheat Commission, said this occurs at open house every other year. The prejudging already has been done, and finalists will compete Saturday at Justin 113. Boswell said the finalists will begin making their bread about 6:30 a.m., and judging will be at 1 p.m.

After the bread is made and judged, Boswell said there will be samples for people to taste.

Other activities at open house will include glass-blowing demonstrations in Willard Hall, a variety show between Denison Hall and Eisenhower Hall, face painting and art projects in Bluemont Hall and the Department of Modern Languages will be giving salsa dance lessons.

Ziegler said open house should be a lot of fun for the 20,000 prospective students, alumni, parents and community members who attend.

"It's almost like a free amusement park without the free rides," she said. "There is so much to see, and one day's not hardly enough to see it all."

Open house provides lasting impression of university to guests

Weekend activities give opportunities for current, future students.

Saturday K-State will have its annual All-University Open House. The open house will start at 9 a.m. and run through 3 p.m. While this might only be a six-hour period, the opportunity could be one that is beneficial for a lifetime.

People make the journey to Manhattan from their respective homes and communities on the first weekend of April, rain or shine, to see this spectacle we call open house. But what really is open house?

For most high school seniors, open house is the first, and maybe only, K-State experience, but what a great experience to have. I remember my first open house nearly three years ago. Man, how the time flies and things change.

Speaking of change, open house is going to be a great way to show off the K-State Union Bookstore, which is in the final stages of an $11-million renovation. But this is not all open house features.

Since the end of September, people have been making plans for all that is going to take place Saturday. When I say people, I am not just talking about 10 to 20. Here is a quick list of the personal commitment to making this weekend a success:

■ All nine colleges, which offer 200 academic majors and career options.

■ An administrative staff that ranges from the dean of student life to Student Publications Inc. and Media Relations and Marketing to the Union Bookstore.

■ Every one of the nearly 400 campus organizations and clubs

■ An open house core committee of which I am so lucky to be a part of.

It is the hope of all these people that you are able to take full advantage of this great opportunity that presents itself on Saturday.

Over the course of these past six months invested in planning open house, it has been the goal of everyone involved to make this a great experience for all ages. From the youngest K-Staters to our most valued alumni, open house has something for the whole family. Where else can you see tightrope-walking rats or sumo-wrestling robots? Take a break by playing lawn croquet or petting your favorite animal at a petting zoo. If you get hungry, enjoy authentic K-State doughnuts or bread.

GUEST VIEWPOINT

Parking is plentiful, and a shuttle service will be available to take to all corners of the campus. Tours of the campus also will be offered throughout the day. For the person who might be feeling lost, we have volunteers who cannot wait to help you. Oh, you cannot miss them because they will be the ones wearing the "Lost Volunteer" T-Shirts. And if all that is not enough, then just follow one of the many signs or the cats' paws on the ground to the destination you desire.

While the main objective is providing an overall image of K-State for people who do not know much about the university, the people who could get the most out of open house are K-State students.

Before I got involved in open house, I was a participant. By the first weekend of April of my freshman year, I was only more confused about this experience we call college. I had come to K-State having grown up wanting to be a doctor, but by now, being a doctor was the farthest thing from my mind.

College was taking its toll on me, and I was trying to answer the million-dollar question: What am I going to do with the rest of my life? The answer was as big and simple as two words: open house. It was at open house that year that I found clubs to get involved in and a major to go into. I used my time to gain more knowledge about K-State and what it has to offer me. Even last year, while helping out with open house for the first time, I was able to expand myself even further into the vast pool of knowledge that this university has to offer.

I encourage everyone to at least step foot on campus to find out for yourselves what open house is really about. I guarantee we can find something similar to what you were looking for. If you are having trouble in the Union, and I personally will help you. That is our commitment to you. Hope to see everyone on Saturday. Yours in Wildcat spirit and purple pride.

OFF-ROAD VEHICLES

Salina's baja car on display at this weekend's open house

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

K-State's All-University Open House will turn into a bit of a car show this weekend.

A group of students at the K-State-Salina campus will use this time of tours to show off their baja car, an off-road racing vehicle capable of seating only one person.

The car will be on display Saturday in the Salina campus' Mechanical Lab 121.

Interest in baja events around K-State-Salina was roused by a field trip to K-State's Manhattan campus last year, said Tom Karcz, open house committee chairman and sophomore in airway sciences/professional pilot.

"The Manhattan group has done it before, and it sparked an idea, so they said they wanted to do one themselves and compete at the regional level," Karcz said. "They get a motor, and then it's up to them."

Those interested in building this type of vehicle must apply for the 10-horse power engine from a manufacturer such as the Briggs and Stratton Company, said Greg Spaulding, faculty adviser for the Salina club.

"We contacted Dave Pacey, and he worked to get us set up, and we went from there," Spaulding said.

Pacey, faculty adviser for Manhattan's Society of Automotive Engineers, aided the Salina group in obtaining their engine after extensive fund raising.

"Last fall, we started putting together money," Spaulding said. "We went out to a number of individuals and companies and told them what the project was about."

The only rule for baja car clubs is the maintenance of the original Briggs and Stratton engine, Spaulding said.

"It even the playing field for everyone when you just build everything else around it," he said.

Dan Bollig, member of the club and junior in mechanical engineering technology, said the group began working on the car just after winter break.

"We've run into some problems along the way, mostly in finding the materials and procrastination," he said.

The problem of procrastination came into play due to the club's late start in attracting members and in starting their car's design, Bollig said.

"We're going for a fairly traditional design," Spaulding said. "The students got on the Net and looked at the cars people had used and had done well with in the past, and from there, they tried to assess what was good and bad about each."

"We're going for a rugged kind of car," he said.

During competitions, baja cars are put through a number of tests, including turning, up-hill climbing, braking, and an endurance run involving tree and rock hazards.

"You're pretty likely to roll your car, so you have to make it durable," Bollig said.

Spaulding said test drives would not be a part of Saturday's baja car showcase, as adjustments still are being made to the car.

"We're not quite there yet," he said. "Students will be around showing it off."

Baseball readies for Tech

■ Team faces 3-game stretch coming off sweep of Niagara.

By SAM STIERS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team (9-16) swept a two-game series with Niagara University this past week, and head coach Mike Clark said the team is playing as well as it has all season. Now, the Wildcats must head south to play a three-game series against Big 12 Conference rival Texas Tech (17-16) in Lubbock.

"We've just got to keep building, and we've got to keep making adjustments," Clark said. "If we can do that, then we'll continue to keep doing a better job."

K-State's weakness all season has been pitching.

However, during the Niagara series, the Cats received dominating performances from starters Jason Wells and Luke Robertson. Wells struck out 10 batters during his complete-game, 7-3 victory Tuesday, and Robertson allowed only one hit in six scoreless innings of work in Wednesday's 11-2 win.

While K-State's offense also clicked in the two-game series against the Purple Eagles, the defense avoided any unnecessary attention with only one error in the series.

As the Wildcats' 1-10 record in the Big 12 indicates, the team has not played well against conference opponents this year. This weekend, the Cats play a solid Red Raider squad that stands 6-6 in conference play.

The Cats' only conference win of the year came at home against Nebraska. K-State lost the three-game series to Nebraska. Texas Tech also lost two of three to the Huskers earlier this season.

The Red Raiders are coming off a 7-5 loss to TCU on Tuesday. The loss snapped the Red Raiders seven-game home winning streak at Dan Law Field.

Tech has outscored its opponents 290-243 for the season, and are averaging 8.9 runs per game.

The Cats have been outscored 163-254 on the year but have put up 39 runs over the past six games, allowing only 26. The Red Raiders pitching staff has a 6.51 ERA on the year, while the Cats' team ERA is 8.61.

Texas Tech is led by head coach Larry Hays. Hays recently became the ninth coach in NCAA Division I history to tally 1,200 career wins. He is in his 13th season with the Red Raiders.

The first game of the series will be played at 7 tonight. The Cats also will play at 2 p.m. Saturday and 1 p.m. Sunday.

Women's tennis team flourishes in March with only 2 losses

If only the K-State women's tennis team could schedule all of its matches in March.

Aside from the team's two losses in Madison, Wis., on March 3 and 4, the Wildcats' record was unblemished through the entire month.

Highlights include an upset of then-No. 18 Baylor on March 18, a five-game winning streak, and a jump to No. 32 in the national polls.

"The singles matches were some of the best tennis anybody could see," head coach Steve Bietau said. "Just to see how hard everyone played and the effort that was out on the court was unbelievable."

K-State's victory over the Bears was a surprise to many. Coming into the match, Baylor posted an undefeated 12-0 record overall and a 5-0 mark in Big 12 Conference play.

However, the Cats showed poise and handed the Bears a 5-4 loss, their first of the season. It was a tight match, with all but two of the singles matches going to the third and final set.

"Winning the close matches comes down to composure and guts," Bietau said. "This isn't the first time we've performed well in tight situations, but it is the first time we've done it against an opponent as difficult as Baylor."

Following the win, K-State jumped 15 spots to No. 34 in the WingspanBank.com Collegiate Tennis Rankings released March 22 by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association.

Then, after wins over UNLV and Colorado last week, the squad moved up two more spots to No. 32 in the Wednesday ITA national rankings, the highest Cat ranking this season.

Now that March is almost over, K-State hopes to follow suit in April. The Cats (10-4) kick off the month Saturday with a showdown against Iowa State (4-8) in Manhattan.

K-State will try to extend two streaks when the Cyclones come to town. The Cats will attempt to pick up their sixth consecutive victory this season, as well as prolong their unbeaten conference record.

The Cats' 4-0 mark in Big 12 play is the best start in K-State tennis history.

Meanwhile, Iowa State posts a winless 0-6 record in the Big 12. Before winning their past two contests over UC San Diego and Creighton, the squad had experienced an eight-game losing streak.

Last year, the Cyclones finish dead last in the conference standings with a 5-17 record overall and a 0-11 mark in Big 12 action.

K-State is led by freshman Petra Sedlmajerova, who posts a 12-2 singles record, with 11 victories coming at No. 1 singles.

Sophomore Kathy Chuda adds strength at the No. 5 singles slot, winning six straight matches as well as 10 of her past 11 to produce a 11-3 spring record.

For Iowa State, the Cyclones will rely on the experience of senior captain and All-Big 12 Academic team member Kendra Leese.

In the series history, K-State has won the past 13 meetings between the two programs dating back to the 1983 season. The Cats defeated the Cyclones, 8-1, last season in Ames.

THE MATCH

Who: K-State vs. Iowa State
When: Saturday at 11 a.m.
Where: Washburn Tennis Facility, near the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The Iowa State match will be the start of a four-game home stand for the Cats, as well as the first of seven straight Big 12 matches to end the regular season. Five of those final seven matches for K-State feature teams that are ranked in the ITA national poll.

Saturday's match is scheduled at 11 a.m. at the Washburn Tennis Facility, the Wildcats' outdoor site. However, in the instance of poor weather, the match will be relocated to Ahearn Field House.

Wildcats head to Florida

■ Track teams to compete in invitational at Gainesville.

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The team aspect of the K-State men's and women's track squads will be tested at their next meet.

The Cats will travel to Gainesville, Fla., for the Florida Invitational, where they will compete against schools with talented athletes, head coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"Florida State has a great jumper, and Southern Florida has good athletes, too," Rovelto said.

Because the meet will incorporate team scores in addition to giving individual medals, the strength of the K-State teams will be under scrutiny. However, a poor showing in one area, such as jumping or sprinting, is not necessarily reason for concern, Rovelto said.

"Some athletes used the last of their eligibility in the indoor season, not on the women's side so much, but we still are trying to fill those holes," Rovelto said. "And all the teams are doing the same thing."

"It's hard to have a strong showing in all areas because there just aren't enough athletes to go around."

Especially tough at Florida will be the women's team competition, because most of the schools participating have quality women's squads, Rovelto said. As a result, the women athletes who already have excelled will be expected to continue their performances.

Among these early successes are junior Korene Hinds, who at the Stanford meet last week, ran the fastest collegiate 3,000-meter time so far this season.

Senior high jumper Erin Anderson cleared 5 feet, 8 inches to win the event at the San Diego meet last week, and freshman distance runner Amy Mortimer finally will get to see action after dropping out of the San Diego meet due to illness. During cross country season, Mortimer placed 12th in the NCAA Cross Country Championships.

As a result of these individuals, Rovelto said he feels good about the team's progress.

"There has been very little to be disappointed with," Rovelto said.

Knight faces allegations, scrutiny

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — First, players and referees felt the wrath of Bob Knight. Now, it's his athletic director.

Indiana Athletic Director Clarence Doninger said he was physically threatened by the basketball coach during a recent shouting match and reported it to school administrators, The Indianapolis Star said Thursday.

The disagreement came after the Hoosiers' 82-71 loss to Ohio State on Feb. 19 and ended with a mutual friend separating Knight and Doninger, the newspaper said, quoting an anonymous source.

Doninger considered the problem serious enough to report to a university vice president, The Star said. School president Myles Brand reported it to university trustees, but no other action was taken.

A university spokesman downplayed the significance of the shouting match Thursday, but acknowledged that an investigation into a former player's claims that Knight had choked him in practice might expand to examine other matters.

"They had a shouting match," Christopher Simpson, an aide to Brand, said. "It was a painful loss, and you have two very competitive officials who raised their voices afterwards."

Last week, Brand appointed two university trustees to investigate Neil Reed's claims that Knight had choked him during practice. Brand ordered the trustees to

Personal triumph abounds in rock climbing

College football might be nothing more than a ghost at Memorial Stadium, but a different kind of sport has occupied the limestone building since K-State's biggest draw relocated to KSU Stadium back in the 1960s.

There are no tickets to sell for this event, no schedule, no scholarships, not even uniforms. But the sport remains a fixture on campus, and the beckoning of warm weather has called these players to the stadium's west wall for their own versions of spring training.

Rock climbing is in session once again.

You've probably seen them before. On any given day, a passerby might witness a group of climbers doing their best imitation of Spiderman with only a rope and harness between them and a free ascent. For some, rock climbing is an activity and a challenge. For the more dedicated, it's nothing short of a lifestyle.

My personal introduction to this realm came during the early months of 1997. Still a freshman caught up in the wonders of Pizza Shuttle and 5 a.m. fire drills, I was thrust into rock climbing by one of my newest friends, Josh Von Loh. Josh only spent one year as a K-State student before his native Colorado called him back, but it was enough time to ensure a long-lasting friendship between us. That bond grew around the rock playground.

Jon BALMER

What seemed like a few harmless climbs on the west wall that spring slowly progressed into roadtrips to Shelf Road and the Garden of the Gods in Colorado Springs. Even Moab, Utah, became a destination last spring. A return trip shouldn't be too far off.

The fact that someone like myself can work through the crux of a 5.10 is indicative of what makes rock climbing so beautiful. You don't have to be in peak condition to enjoy it.

My insatiable Taco Casa fix might prohibit me from succeeding in other sports, but it hasn't kept me from cranking on certain structures, natural or manmade. As the cliché goes, all you need is desire.

Don't let the flat terrain of Kansas discourage you, either. There's plenty to sample in the heartland if you can't make the days drive to the Rocky Mountains. The newest issue of Rock & Ice magazine, the rock climber's handbook, has a detailed report on climbing in Kansas. Rock City in Minneapolis, one of the better spots for bouldering, is featured. There's even a shot of the stadium in the article. If the article isn't enough, anyone interested in learning more or getting started can contact the K-State Climbing Club or just strike up a conversation with someone out on the wall. While some climbers shun those outside of their clique, most are happy to offer insight and stories about the sport.

Climbing is still relatively under the radar at K-State. Still, there are plenty of signs that it's picking up. Look no further than the recently built climbing wall at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. A small step, but still a positive one.

If the indoor experience isn't enough, the west wall is never overcrowded. Rock climbing might not be the first thing you associate with Memorial Stadium, but for those of you searching for a close place to crank and scale some rock, it's the best Manhattan has to offer.

Jon Balmer is a senior in print journalism. He can be reached at jkb2004@ksu.edu.

Dan Broers, junior in physical science, stretches to get a hold near the top of West Stadium. Dan started climbing a couple of years ago because it was something different to do.

Salina students develop solar watercraft

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several students at K-State-Salina are putting their classroom work to good use — in the water.

Norm Mortensen, assistant professor of electronics engineering technology, said about 12 students are working on the school's first solar boat team. Like the solar car, the boat runs on solar cells and competes in national competitions.

Mortensen said the practical experience students gain from working on the boat in the mechanical, electronic and design phases, will help them in their future careers.

"Most students can solve engineering problems in the classroom, but have a harder time fitting in the practical applications of these problems in a real-life situation," he said. "This is an opportunity for them to design and build a full system while working in a multiple-discipline and full-integrated project."

Mortensen said the team is preparing for the Solar Splash competition June 7-11 in New Orleans. Solar Splash is a yearly regatta that serves as the World Championship of Solar/Electric Boating.

Josh Greenwood, student leader of the solar boat team and senior in electronic engineering technology, said the team, which is in its first year, will compete in three races — a sprint, endurance and slalom race. He said the team is in the process of designing the boat. After the one-man boat is completed, they will begin testing it on the water.

"Once the boat is built, we will begin to do performance tests," he said. "We want to see what the optimal conditions will be in the competition so we can do well in June."

Greenwood said the one-man boat is canoe size with solar cells as its primary source of power. He said that by working on the team, he is learning teamwork and experience that will be useful after he graduates.

"This is a way to make use of our major and areas of concentration," Greenwood said. "We have the opportunity to use practical, hands-on applications and work together as a team."

Mortensen said Solar Splash is a national and international competition created to bring awareness to solar-powered activities. This year, teams from the U.S. Coast Guard Academy, Columbia University, Virginia Tech and the University of Michigan are among the competitors.

Curtis Pacey, junior in electronic engineering technology and computer engineering technology, said the team hopes to begin construction of the boat within the next week. He said he enjoys working with the solar-boat team because of the hands-on experience, as well as meeting and working with people from many different disciplines in the college.

"I became involved with the team because I wanted to use the information I have been learning in class," Pacey said. "This gives me the opportunity to apply book work and class lectures to a real application."

Pacey said the team meets every week for a couple of hours to discuss and work on the preliminary design of the boat. He said a display will be available at open house, and the team also will be giving the K-State-Salina campus an opportunity to help name the boat once it is completed.

"We will probably have a box that people will be able to submit potential names available soon," Pacey said. "We will also have a display at open house so the public can see what we are working on, and what we will be competing in this summer."

Open house offers chance for recruitment

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Residence halls, off-campus or greek life — the choice is up to many prospective students.

A hidden advantage to All-University Open House, however, is recruitment for these living options, especially sororities and fraternities.

Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, said all of the greek houses will be having tours and individual activities throughout the day.

She said open house allows them to begin recruitment for next year earlier by allowing high school students to see and hear what each house is about and what it accomplishes.

"This gives students the chance to know about their greek options," Robel said. "It shows them the resources on campus so they can pursue an initial visit at houses they are interested in."

Robel said the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils will have booths set up in the K-State Student Union with material on each of the sororities and fraternities as well as rush information.

She also said individual chapters will have booths available to give students a better understanding of greek life.

"This can help prospective students make an early decision about what they want to do in the fall," Robel said. "It will let them know much more about greek life before they start the rush process."

Sara Tirrell, president of Pi Beta Phi, said the sorority not only will have a table in the Union for interested students to ask questions, but it also will be doing its philanthropy during open house.

Tirrell, senior in pre-medicine, also said the sorority will be open for tours throughout the duration of open house so interested women and their families can stop in to see what the sorority is about and ask questions about this type of living organization.

"Open house provides a perfect opportunity for students who have questions about whether or not they are interested in this kind of living organization or K-State itself to ask questions and find out what we do," Tirrell said. "This allows them one-on-one visits with one of our members to help them answer questions and make decisions about their future here."

Brian Fisher, president of Sigma Nu, said the fraternity is also one of the chapters that will have table in the Union.

He said the information booth allows potential members to gain knowledge of the fraternity and get them to go by the house for a tour and to meet more members.

"The university does a great job of bringing a lot of people to the campus at one time," Fisher said. "This gives us the opportunity to meet people and then get them to come up to the house for a tour. There they can talk more to other members and get more detailed information."

Fisher said 60-80 students came to the house last year during open house.

He said he thinks almost 75 percent of the recruitment class this year toured the house and received more information on that day.

Fisher said although there are no set activities for the event, he said it gives potential members the opportunity to play basketball or do other activities to get to know the current members and find out if Sigma Nu is right for them.

"Since they're in no set time-frame for open house, we just keep the house open all day," Fisher said. "We have displays set up with pictures of the activities we do and have other activity options available, but we leave it pretty much open to fit the schedules of those stopping by throughout the day."

Greek houses to construct mile from quarters to benefit charity

By GINA KOHAKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fighting multiple sclerosis 25 cents at a time is the mission for some fraternity and sorority members this weekend.

Theta Xi fraternity and Pi Beta Phi sorority are gathering quarters to build a miracle mile throughout the pathways of campus Saturday during the All-University Open House.

The quarters will be given to the Multiple Sclerosis Society after the event, said Jared Rose, Miracle Mile chairman for Theta Xi.

"We think it is a worthy cause," Rose, junior in political science, said. "It is a great way to bring awareness to the problem of multiple sclerosis."

A mile of quarters is estimated to be more than $15,000. In past years, the event has raised between $2000 and $3000 in support of multiple sclerosis research, Rose said.

"Our goal is to collect a mile, which is a total of $15,000," said Amanda Finger, philanthropy chair for Pi Phi. "Last year, we made $2,000."

Theta Xi and Pi Beta Phi have visited local businesses to gather donations.

Finger, senior in political science, said each business that donates $60 or more will receive a sign along the mile advertising itself to the onlookers at open house.

"The purpose of the signs is to gain publicity for the businesses," she said. "Having the opportunity to display their name during open house makes people more aware of their contributions to the community."

Like the businesses, greek houses and organizations can provide a donation of $40 or more to receive a sign.

"It is a great way to bring awareness to the problem of multiple sclerosis."

— Jared Rose,
Miracle Mile
chairman

"When other houses donate to our cause, it shows a certain amount of greek unification and that we are all supportive to each others' charities and philanthropies," Finger said.

Students and visitors also are welcome to provide quarters for the mile.

"Anyone who happens to be on campus on Saturday is welcome to lay down quarters to help in our fight of MS," Rose said.

Activities have been planned to draw attention to the cause.

"Bill Snyder will be around at noon to lay down some ceremonial quarters in the shape of a wildcat," Rose said.

KJCK-FM 94.5 will be on campus for a live broadcast of the event.

Also, the men's vocal group Cadence is scheduled to sing during the day.

"The miracle mile is a really good way to give money, and it is easy because you only have to give a quarter," said Lindsay Youle, Pi Phi and junior in kinesiology. "If we each give a little, it adds up to be a lot."

Brent Schultz, sophomore in management information systems, places quarters on a Powercat that was made outside Denison Hall on April 10 during the All-University Open House last year as part of the Miracle Mile. The Miracle Mile was sponsored by Theta Xi fraternity and Pi Beta Phi sorority to raise money for the Multiple Sclerosis Society and Global Volunteers. About $2,000 was raised.

Union to accommodate activities despite continuing construction

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Student Union is "host to the campus," and Cindie Snyder, marketing and promotions director of the Union, said it is like the living room of the campus.

"We don't usually sponsor many events, but we are here with our services to offer those who attend," she said.

The construction will not affect the Union's All-University Open House events either, Snyder said.

"We are limited on first-floor space right now, but we've just moved some tables and booths up to the second floor as well," Snyder said.

"We'll have signs everywhere, so no one will miss anything," she said.

Snyder said people should not enter areas where construction is still in progress for their own safety.

"We ask that they don't enter areas designated 'hard hat only,'" she said. "Although we do encourage people to look at the construction that has been completed like Forum Hall, the bookstore, Cats' Den, the Copy Center and the ID Center."

Den, the Copy Center and the ID Center."

One event the K-State Union Bookstore will be offering is the "Land Grant Ladies: Wives of the K-State Presidents" exhibit, sponsored by the Riley County Historical Museum.

The author of "Land Grant Ladies" will be present to discuss and autograph books from noon to 3 p.m. Saturday.

A 12-panel display featuring the work of each of the presidential wives will be at the bookstore both today and Saturday.

"It shows how influential these women were and what they achieved," Snyder said. "They were in a very influential position to make changes on campus and in the community. A lot of these women addressed some serious issues."

Other entertainment at the Union will include the Justin Williams Band, sponsored by the Union Program Council. The band will be playing in the Union Food Court dining area.

"They're an alternative band that was recommended quite highly to us," Claire Mohlman, UPC Special Events chairperson, said. "They're a more modern band that younger people will like to listen to. Hopefully, they'll help draw people into the Union and the Food Court."

The Union will be a focal point for the College of Arts and Sciences, and other colleges and student services will have booths and tables as well, Jack Connaughton, Union associate director, said.

"With the renovation, we'll be a little spread out, but we want to remind everyone that there are three levels of exhibits," Connaughton said. "All of our services will be open — our operating areas and recreation."

Buggy rides, barbecue, industry displays offered by K-State College of Agriculture

By BEN HOPPER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Feeling the inside of a rumen in Call Hall might be the closest most people ever will come to the digestive system of a cow.

This is only one event planned by the College of Agriculture for the All-University Open House. The college has been promoting agriculture throughout the week through various Ag Fest activities.

"Ag Fest is used to promote the agriculture industry, show its importance to campus and preview open house activities," said Jodi Mason, assistant coordinator of Ag Fest.

Baby farm animals and a John Deere combine were on display Wednesday in the free-speech zone.

"We had a lot of non-ag students stop by," Mason, sophomore in agriculture education, said.

Teams of students competed Thursday in a quiz bowl sponsored by Ag Ambassadors.

FarmHouse and the Alpha Gamma Rho fraternities will have a free barbecue at 12:30 p.m. today on the west Weber Hall lawn.

"We're going with the tailgating atmosphere," Mason said.

Aggie Avenue, this year's theme, will showcase the clubs and activities within the college and help recruit new students, said Kevin Donnelly, assistant dean of academic programs.

"We target another group during open house," Donnelly said. "It exposes a lot of younger kids to the exciting things in the College of Agriculture."

The displays that traditionally have been in Waters Hall will move to the lawn in front of Umberger Hall, creating an avenue from Throckmorton Hall to Weber Hall, said Kristen Spicer, open house coordinator for Ag Council.

In addition, the horse and buggy ride will go through campus this year.

The Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow and the American Society of Agricultural Engineers will be co-hosts of a pancake feed from 7 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Saturday in Seaton 142.

"Manhattan is a pancake-feed kind of town," Jennifer White, senior in agricultural journalism, said. "It really brings out the support of the community."

White said this is the second time the two groups have teamed up for the pancake feed.

"The nice thing about this collaboration is we get to work with another group and meet new people," White, treasurer of ACT, said.

Block and Bridle is to be host of the 72nd-annual Little American Royal in Weber Arena at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Jesse McCurry, senior in agricultural journalism, coordinated the LAR.

"It is the longest running event at K-State in regard to student activities," McCurry said.

About 100 students will compete in the showmanship contest showing swine, sheep, beef, dairy or horses, he said.

"There is a good mix of students that have shown and those who have not," McCurry said.

Ag Fest and open house activities will conclude Sunday with the Ag Awards Assembly, honoring agriculture students who have excelled in academics, leadership and activities.

"All of these activities give great visibility to the college," Donnelly said.

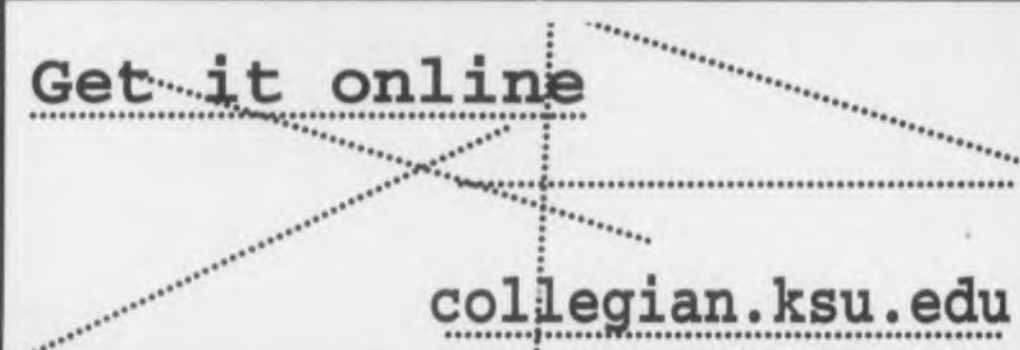

We invite you to tour our house and barbeque between 12-3:30.

Feel free to stay for sand volleyball & basketball with the brothers of Kappa Sigma.

We look forward to seeing you!

Telefund participants win car, prizes for contributions

■ 1999 Neon awarded at open house Friday.

By NANCY FOSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kelly Land never expected that four hours of calling K-State alumni would produce keys to a 1999 Plymouth Neon.

Land, senior in marketing and international business, was not the only one who walked away with a prize from Telefund 2000. Chuck Boothe, junior in computer engineering, received a $500 Parent Telefund Scholarship and Matt Morrow, freshman in electrical engineering, received a picnic for 30 people sponsored by Bockers Two Catering.

The prizes were awarded as the grand finale to Telefund 2000, an all-volunteer telephone campaign that set an all-time record of raising $1,235,174. The three prize winners were announced Friday at the Telefund 2000 Nestle Prize Bash, which took place during the opening ceremonies of the College of Engineering's All-University Open House.

About 500 people filled Pedestrian Island for the ceremony and announcement. Pounds of candy were tossed out to the crowd, while Willie the Wildcat stood at the top of Seaton Hall shooting out T-shirts.

The three randomly selected winners were told they were finalists, but were not told what prize they had won. Land said when she heard her name called as the winner of the car, she didn't think it could be true.

"I had a friend that had done Telefund before and said it was a good way to raise money for your college," she said. "I didn't think anything this big would happen."

She said she participated in the fund-raiser for fun, never thinking she would win the grand prize.

Gordon Dowell, director of annual giving, said the car they gave away this year was better than last year's, because it has an automatic transmission.

"This one will probably be better than last year's because it was a five-speed," he said. "The girl last year had to have her dad come pick it up."

The money to purchase the car was donated by the Big Wheels organization in Wichita, a group of about 45 K-State alumni and friends.

Boothe said he was excited to win the $500 Telefund Parent Scholarship but was a little disappointed not to win the car.

"I'm happy because I got a scholarship, but I was looking forward to the car," he said. "It's something I can use, too."

He said when he was contacted as a winner he was shocked.

"When they told me, I was shocked because I wasn't expecting

OPEN HOUSE OFFERS ATTRACTIONS, INSIGHTS INTO CAMPUS ACTIVITIES

Rain and cloud cover did not keep crowds from gathering to witness a tightrope walking rat at the All-University Open House over the weekend.

The open house drew students, parents and community members for the 22nd year in a row.

Jenny Ziegler, senior in architectural engineering and student coordinator for the open house, said the open house offered attractions for anyone in attendance.

"We had so many things to see as well as advertising all of the academic majors," Ziegler said. "There were things from cockroach racing to robots for people to look at."

The open house offered insight into the various aspects of campus for prospective students, as well as current students and community members. The K-State Student Union was the central location for information on things such as academic majors, admission, student organizations and financial assistance.

STORY BY JAMIE BARRETT

The fair spread all over campus, with activities ranging from touring the butterfly conservatory to sampling fresh doughnuts and bread baked by the Bakery and Science Club.

Ziegler said it was inviting because of the friendly atmosphere K-State possesses.

"I think the main reason the open house is always so popular is because everyone is so friendly," Ziegler said.

Julie Tangkawarow, prospective student from Lindsborg, Kan., said she attended the open house because she is in the midst of deciding on a college.

"I thought I should come out here and look around," Tangkawarow said. "I really like what I have seen so far, and I think that I am going to be coming here."

Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said open house was a genuine opportunity to get caught up in all the excitement.

KSU vs. KU blood drive begins today

By MICHELLE BERTUGLIA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the largest blood drives in Kansas, the K-State vs. KU Blood Drive begins today and will run through Friday, said Kim Van Meter, student coordinator for the Riley County American Red Cross.

The blood drive will begin at 10:30 a.m. today in the K-State Student Union. Students, faculty and staff who are interested in donating can go to the third floor of the Union, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex or Putnam Hall.

In the general populace, 60 percent of people are eligible to give blood, but only five percent actually do, Dori Milldyke, community coordinator for the Red Cross said. This creates a shortage of blood because it is one of the few substances for which there are no substitutes, she said.

"It is important for everyone to give blood," Milldyke said. "But it is important for students to give blood because they are younger and more capable of giving blood."

The campus goal is to collect 800 units of blood

Dodgeball tournament benefits student, clubs

By BRIAN CLARK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Geri Johnson, senior in French, is suffering from mosquito-borne encephalitis and ADE, two debilitating diseases that have left her with speech, memory and balance problems.

Proceeds from the first "Dodge For A Cause" dodgeball tournament will be provided to assist Johnson and the Manhattan Area Boys and Girls Clubs.

Jeremiah Johnson, of Phi Gamma Delta, and Tracey Boucher, of Gamma Phi Beta, were the organizers of the event, which brought in about 300 participants.

"I was expecting there to be a few problems," Johnson said. "I was surprised that there were not too many. Everyone seemed pretty pleased."

The switch to daylight-saving time made the 10:30 a.m. start come even earlier, said Judd Herbster, who played for one of the three Kappa Sigma teams.

"It was hard coming out of bed that early on a Sunday morning," Herbster said.

The activity of the tournament filled the small gym at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, with two basketball floors used simultaneously for matches.

Johnson said, nearly 40 teams competed in the tournament. Many greek houses were able to field more than one team because of the low entrance fee of $25.

Teams were placed in pools and participated in round-robin play. The pool winners were then placed in a single-elimination bracket that determined a champion.

The men of Alpha Tau Omega and the women of Pi Beta Phi won the tournament.

Champions were awarded with trophies, cassettes and compact discs, Johnson said.

Each game started with eight volleyballs placed at the mid-court stripe. The two teams positioned themselves at each end line and, when the signal was given, charged the balls.

After the initial charge, the players then retreated behind their respective free throw lines and began plotting strategy. More than once, one side had more balls than the other at the start and eventually cornered the other team against the wall.

Players were eliminated after being hit by a ball thrown by the opposing team or after throwing a ball that was then caught by the other team. Two outs eliminated the player from the match, relegating them to sideline cheering and coaching duty.

Nicole Fischer, freshman in apparel design, and Marie Ziegler, freshman in interior design, were coaches of the Kappa Sigma 3 team.

"We tell them where to be and when to be there," Ziegler said. "We try to encourage them along."

Boucher said Geri Johnson applied for the tournament proceeds and was selected. The Boys and Girls Club was also selected by the committee as a way to keep the proceeds in Manhattan, Boucher said.

"Next year, we hope to have more applicants for the proceeds," she said. Fischer said the tournament was for a good cause — to have fun and make money.

IRS Tax Tour to stop at Union Thursday to offer tax advice

The Internal Revenue Service's mobile Tax Tour heads toward Manhattan to assist in the preparation of filling out the 1999 Federal and state tax forms.

The Tax Tour has helped people in their local communities for the past two years.

"It was initiated to help service taxpayers, where there was no local IRS office," Aidan Schroeder, IRS spokesperson said.

IRS and Kansas Department of Revenue representatives will be available to offer free tax information and assistance.

Taxpayers who come by for assistance are asked to bring their 1999 W-2 forms, and any other needed information. The federal tax preparation will be limited to Forms 1040, 1040 Schedules A, B (interest only) and R, 1040EZ, 1040A and Schedule EITC.

Taxpayers also can collect copies of federal and state forms at the Tax Tour location.

The Tax Tour van will be located at the K-State Student Union from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday.

Free assistance also is available through the IRS's toll free telephone information system at 1-800-829-1040, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Assistance also can be found at the IRS Web site www.irs.gov.

"The Tax Tour has been successful so far, and we are continually receiving positive feedback from taxpayers," Schroeder said.

Broncos' cornerback faces suspension pending appeal

DENVER — Denver Broncos cornerback Dale Carter will be suspended for one year for violating the NFL's substance-abuse policy if he loses an appeal, The Denver Post reported Sunday.

The newspaper, citing unidentified NFL sources, said that Carter had violated the policy twice in the past three months and had two previous violations during his seven-year career.

The appeal is expected to be heard in 10 days, the Post said.

Carter, who signed with the Broncos as a free agent in 1999, could lose his job as well as the $3.5 million he is to be paid next season. If he tests positive again, he could face a lifetime NFL ban.

Carter's agent Mitch Frankel was unaware of the suspension.

College simulation. Two 20-minute semesters with a five-minute winter break and a two-minute spring break might seem like the perfect way to earn a degree.

But for high school sophomores, this simulation was meant to provide a taste of college life. The Student Alumni Board brought 95 high school sophomores to K-State's All-University Open House to participate in the "For Sophomores Only" event, said Mitzi Frieling, adviser for the Student Alumni Board.

Sophomores participated in a college simulation activity at 8 a.m. in the K-State Student Union, Frieling said. Before the simulation, students set academic and social goals, which were determined on a point system.

During the activity, "distracters" attempted to keep students from earning points by persuading them to go to the bar or get involved with campus organizations.

"They start to learn that college is not just going to class two hours a day," Frieling said. "It gives them a taste of what it's going to be like going to college."

There was also a session for parents that included opportunities to talk to admissions and financial aid representatives and other parents of college students.

The event concluded with guest speaker Larry Dixon, who serves on the KSU Alumni Association Board of Directors.

Weekend expo draws young, old

By STEPHANIE J. BONNELL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ashley Schreefer, Wakefield, Kan., said one of the reasons she attended the expo was because her Grandma wanted to.

Manhattan was the host of Expo 2000, the 11th annual all-in-one home, business and outdoors show Saturday and Sunday at the KSU Sports Complex. It lasted from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday.

There were small trailers that carried people to and from their cars and from show to show. An old fire engine also was available to give rides to those attending the expo.

Mark Healy, account executive for Century Business Systems, said it had been there since the expo started.

"It is great getting to see the people," Healy said. "We get to touch base with the people we need to see."

There were more than 98 exhibitors featuring home and business displays on the concourse of Bramlage Coliseum.

"I like to see all the different companies and what they have to offer," Anita Kesler, Manhattan resident, said. "You can also win some fun prizes."

Chad Joyce, Linda Wertzberger, Lori Reid and Jeff Peterson, of the Orthopaedic and Sports Medicine Center, inflated rubber gloves to hand out to children.

"It was a big hit last year," Wertzberger said.

Peterson, former K-State student body president, said the expo is wonderful because so many people from around the region attend the event.

The boat, recreational vehicle and outdoor show was on the main floor of Bramlage.

Four Seasons RV Acres sales and service campground had RVs on display.

The Ronald McDonald House from Manhattan and Junction City had a casting competition.

The top finishers had a chance to win a bass boat or Waverunner package.

STEVEN DEARINGER/COLLEGIAN

Three-year-old Jace Morganfield, Manhattan resident, gives his all during the pedal tractor pull outside Bramlage Coliseum at the home, business and outdoor show Saturday. The show was open Saturday and Sunday.

State golf coach Tim Norris gave golf instructions Saturday.

Colbert Hills Golf Course had a booth on the Bramlage floor that gave people the opportunity to drive a golf ball.

There were 70 exhibitors with home improvement and remodeling displays in Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

People who donated $5 were put into a drawing offered by the Manhattan Area Builders for an opportunity to win K-State football season tickets.

The Manhattan Area Builders Association sponsors the home show annually.

The business and outdoor show is sponsored by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

Phil Arkfeld, manager of Electrolux out of Topeka, said a lot of the company's customers have come from Manhattan since the 1940s.

Electrolux had a drawing for a 2000 Volkswagen Bug.

"We draw for it at the end of the year," Arkfeld said.

Local church sponsors vigil to raise awareness for Palestinian refugees

By JASON BECK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There were two grimy green canvas tents in the grass and about a dozen people huddled around them on blankets set on the ground. The tents are what Palestinian refugees in the West Bank are forced to live in after their homes are bulldozed by the Israeli government.

They might look strange set among the softball fields and brightly colored playgrounds, with cars passing on one side, and the giant Johnny Kaw statue on the other.

That's because these tents are not in the West Bank, and Palestinians are not living in them. The tents were in Manhattan's City Park, and the men and women in them were members of the Manhattan Mennonite Church.

"We are trying to be sensitive to the plight of the Palestinian people," said Merv Bitikofer, a member of the MMC. "People don't realize how extensively some of these people are suffering."

The Manhattan Mennonite Church had vigils at City Park this weekend, on Saturday evening and again on Sunday morning.

Church members set up tents in the park, along with a table holding literature on the subject and some pieces of tile from a ruined Palestinian home.

"Our government is sympathetic to Israel, so we overlook things their government is doing," Bitikofer said.

Bob Atchison, who organized the event, traveled to Israel and visited a family whose home was destroyed by the Israeli government.

"You see that, you visit the people, and it becomes very emotional," he said.

Atchison said he started the event to try to bring this injustice to people's attention because he felt that the mainstream media were ignoring the problem.

"Let's just say that the first-hand, eyewitness accounts I was receiving varied greatly from the things I was seeing in the media," Atchison said.

Atchison said his ultimate goal was to draw attention to the problem, either through the news media or just by individual people.

"Most of the stuff you see on television is Palestinians throwing rocks at Israeli soldiers," he said. "Let's face it, a paper can be biased by who's calling the shots."

Another of his goals was to try to change the perception most Americans have about Arab peoples. Atchison said he is concerned that most Americans regard the Arab population as their enemy.

"We only hear about the Arab terrorists," he said.

Atchison, who taught Sunday school at the MMC, was first contacted by a group working in the West Bank for the Christian Peacemaker Teams, a program of Mennonite Church of the Brethren and General Conference of Mennonite Churches.

Atchison said that the CPT is dedicated to creating a non-violent solution for the problem in the West Bank. Its brochure states, "We believe a renewed commitment to the gospel of peace calls us to new forms of public witness which may include non-violent direct action."

"Their basic belief is, that if soldiers are willing to risk their lives for what they believe in, then shouldn't pacifists also be willing to do the same thing?" he said.

He eventually traveled to the West Bank and visited Abdel Wahab Solieman Idrees, Idrees' wife and their eight children. Their home was destroyed by the Israeli government.

"Israel will tell you that these people don't have building permits," Atchison said. "But it's very difficult for a Palestinian to get a building permit in the West Bank."

Atchison said the Palestinians were regulated by building codes established in 1942 by British mandate, but that the Israelis were using modern codes.

"The big question is, whose land is it?" Atchison said.

In many cases, Bitikofer said, the homeless Palestinians set up their tents on the same land their houses used to be on, because if you vacate the property for so many days, you lose it.

Atchison said the real reason the Israeli government was clearing the Palestinians was to make way for their own new settlements. He said more homes were being destroyed and more settlements were going up all the time.

"The longer the peace process is put off," he said, "the more Israeli settlements are built. Soon it will become a non-issue, and it almost is right now."

Students should give blood, help prepare for future

Sometimes it's hard to prepare for the future.

Saving money or getting ahead of the game isn't all that feasible.

But there is one thing you can do to prepare for your future, the future of someone you love or the future of someone you don't even know but who will sincerely appreciate your gift.

Give blood.

The American Red Cross will be collecting blood from several convenient locations this week: the K-State Student Union from 10:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. today and from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. the rest of the week, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex from 4 p.m. to 9 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday and in Putnam Hall from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. today.

You might have some reservations about giving away part of your body to a perfect stranger. This is understandable.

Maybe you think it'll hurt. It might pinch a little, but we're all grown-ups here. I think we can handle a little shot. Now's a great time to get over that needle phobia you've been nursing.

You think you might pass out or get woozy. You might, but let's look on the bright side — you get free cookies and orange juice to bring your blood sugar back up. Chances are, though, you will probably be fine.

Maybe you're still living in a cave and think you can get HIV or another disease from giving blood. You can't. Phlebotomists use the strictest sterilization and safety measures to ensure that disease is not spread to you or the person receiving the blood.

Maybe you think there's too much of a time commitment involved. You say you're too busy. It takes less than an hour.

We're sure you can find an hour out of your schedule to help save a life.

Giving blood won't have too much of a long-term effect on your life, other than a lasting feeling that you've done a good deed.

But it will have a lasting effect on the person who receives your blood. It could save a life.

It could even be you who needs the blood — or someone you love.

URBAN AWAKENING

Spring break trip provides first-hand view of inner-city diversity, sense of hope for future

I went to St. Louis for spring break because I wanted to do and experience something real and meaningful. One thousand miles, seven days and one ruined 1987 Honda Civic later, I can say I got my money's worth.

The project was an eye-opening experience. Much of what I saw I had read about. Much of what I heard I had been told before. But there it became real and fresh.

We stayed at New City Fellowship in University City, Mo., only a mile or so from the edge of St. Louis. With black and white co-pastors and a congregation encompassing almost every social, economic and ethnic background imaginable, NCF is one of the most diverse churches in the area. Its commitment to racial reconciliation and serving the poor and disadvantaged readily was apparent. The church offices are located a few miles from the facilities, on one of the worst streets in St. Louis.

The first night, the 40 or so of us from K-State, the University of Kansas and Central College (in Iowa) made a list of things we associated with the words inner city. Most of the things on the list were negative — poverty, violence, drugs, decay — all the typical social pathologies. We then set out to see for ourselves what the reality was, to be challenged in our thinking and our living.

Among many experiences of learning and serving, our main work project was the restoration of abandoned homes for families in the church. Many of these houses were three stories and all brick, but have been sitting abandoned for decades. Most were purchased for less than $5,000 at tax auctions, but need at least one year and $80,000 of work to be livable.

The homes we worked on, and the neighborhoods they were in, stood as relics of another era — a time when Hamilton Heights and the West End were some of the most prestigious addresses in St. Louis, a time when St. Louis was a thriving city of 1 million people, full of business, industry and culture. A time of safe, clean communities and stable families. That was before the 1960s. It was about that time that the gradual influx of minorities (mostly blacks) into the city and into the middle class reached the point where the white people of St. Louis began to get uneasy. In many neighborhoods, 15-20 percent of the population were minorities. When race riots erupted across the country in large cities, with all the characteristic furor of that era, whites felt that their worst suspicions about the blacks next door had been justified. And so, the phenomenon of white flight began. The resulting destabilization, drop in property values and loss of jobs and wealth due to businesses leaving devastated the city.

St. Louis has now become a showcase of urban decay. Between 1960 and 1990, the city lost 70 percent of its population to the surrounding suburbs. The metropolitan area of about 2.5 million people is one of the nation's most sprawling, with only 350,000 in the city itself. There are currently five square miles of vacant land in St. Louis, and many more square miles taken up by abandoned warehouses and homes. Poverty, drugs, crime, struggling schools, unemployment and broken families have become the new constants.

It was into this world we ventured, and what we saw was remarkable. Homes and neighborhoods gradually being cleaned up and restored. Lives that were once dominated by hate, fear, prejudice or hopelessness now were bursting with love, transformed by Jesus Christ. People who worked hard and cared for their families and communities. People who had few material possessions and little education, but amazing faith and strength. As we looked closer at what generally is seen as a wasteland, we saw hope budding and even blooming in the midst of a desert of despair.

The home we worked on was typical, once majestic, then abandoned to ruins, but now gradually being restored. It was to be for Suzanne Bates, a single mother of four who had just completed seminary and was going to be counseling youth in the inner city. As we worked, a remarkable parallel struck me between these homes and the people we met and learned of during the week.

At first glance, many of the people of the inner city seem — or once seemed — to be a lost cause. The social pathologies are epidemic and the hopelessness runs deep. But a closer look reveals incredible potential and worth. And just like the old brick homes, they can and are being restored, one life at a time, to the greatness and glory for which they were intended.

At the end of the week, we took out the list we had made in the beginning and made a new list next to it. "Hope. Faith. Potential. Love. Sacrifice. Family. Community. Children. Restoration..."

Gerry Chappeau, the project director, then pointed to the old list. "All of these things are true. I won't deny any of it. But," he said, pointing to our new list, "this is also true."

There is hope in St. Louis.

I saw it with my own eyes, alive and well, as people — rich and poor, black and white, urban and suburban — courageously lived out the gospel of Jesus Christ.

VIEWPOINT

SCOTT RONEY

Advising, teaching roles need reversal

We are taught by students and advised by professors.

The only time one can be advised by a person whose sole job is to advise is when they are a pre-major. This twisted method of pushing students through the university system is not only confusing but detrimental to the students involved.

Now, don't get me wrong — professors do a good job of advising and graduate teaching assistants do an adequate job of teaching. I say adequate for a few reasons.

First, GTAs should not be the main instructor of a class. They are knowledgeable in the area of study. However, for the most part, they have no instruction in teaching.

These graduate students are simply students of a certain field who are hired to teach a class without having any teaching background. This is through no fault of their own. If they wanted to major in education, they would have.

Secondly, I say they are adequate because, as students, GTAs have classwork just like the rest of us. For example, a GTA may have an exam on the same day the class he or she teaches has an exam.

Therefore, the teacher's studying time is cut, but more importantly, the teacher possibly is unavailable to his or her students on the day of the exam. If students have last minute questions, they cannot go to their instructor to get them answered.

I'm sure the GTA program is helpful to the students, faculty and university, but shouldn't the program's function be consistent with its title?

A graduate teaching assistant should be just that: an assistant.

KATIE SUTTON

There always should be an instructor with a teaching degree there to oversee and advise students (graduate and otherwise) and to be available when the GTA is not.

As I said earlier, there is also a problem with advisers being professors. I think it would be beneficial to all involved if the university had a separate advising staff for each school.

This would help out professors in terms of work load (though I'm sure they enjoy advising students).

It would make scheduling easier on the student because they wouldn't have to work around the adviser/instructor's class schedule. Besides, it's hard enough to schedule around your own.

Furthermore, what if you have a double major? I know I was assigned two advisers. Do I have to see both to enroll? And what if one contradicts the other?

If there was a separate advising staff who could counsel in every area of a school (in this case the school of mass communications), it would be less confusing and a whole lot more convenient.

Some might say that the instructors are the best qualified to advise because they are specialized in that particular field. Well, even if K-State employed an independent advising staff, the professors would still be available for consultation.

If you have instructors whose opinion and guidance is essential to your success then simply ask them what their advice would be. This could be done with a centralized advising system and still eliminate scheduling messes and confusion.

It would be a great help to all members of the university in we could keep people doing one job — advisers should advise the students, teachers should teach the students and students should learn from their teachers.

Instructors could learn from students, but that's a different column all together.

Katie Sutton is a sophomore in print journalism and public relations. You can e-mail her at ktlayne@hotmail.com.

The Collegian's Reader Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on any topic for 20 seconds.

It's not that hard to just hold the door for someone who is right behind you.

Two comments in one day's Fourum. That's pathetic. I'm sure there's more negative thoughts on this campus you can put in the Fourum.

Hey, Joe. If I hire one of your nerdy ex-columnists as my campaign manager, can you guarantee I'll win next year's presidential election?

Kudos to Ms. Kistner. Our military students do deserve more recognition.

Yeah, Elliott. I e-mailed your fish, and he never got back to me. I was just wondering if he was still alive.

The Fourum has sucked this week.

Our baseball team really does suck.

To all the girls whose clothes leave nothing to the imagination: Thank you. You're making the world a better place.

Ken Wells looks like he just got out of a lobotomy.

I don't care what David Levin says. Gas prices are too high, and the U.S. should take over the world.

The ignorant people who have made negative comments about the baseball team apparently know nothing about athletics and need to get a life.

If Asbury thinks straw and bib overalls will do him any good, maybe he ought to try good morals and treating his players better.

I just got the Kansas State University cap on a Mountain Dew. Are they in the Final Four? Am I gonna win?

The Collegian has yet to show — at least this semester — an adult person of color doing anything other than athletics or diversity. Why?

David Levin: maybe paying $1.60 won't hurt you too much, but there are a lot of people who will disagree with you.

Whoever thinks that badgers are, pound for pound, the fiercest creature in the animal kingdom, has obviously never heard of the mighty wolverine.

With Beasley at the helm, look for the Iowa Hawkeyes to knock off K-State.

It really upset me last week that the Collegian was the only major news outlet in the state of Kansas that did not report Tom Asbury's comments about K-State fans wearing bib overalls and straw hats.

The Collegian is the best. Happy April Fools' Day.

Cox Communications increases coverage

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — By this time next year, more Kansas consumers could be using the same company not only to watch the big game, but also to call their friends about it afterward.

Cox Communications confirmed late last week that it is planning to leverage its recent investment in cable television into the telephone business, a move that state officials said is the first of its kind.

Until now, no Kansas company has used its own lines to compete with Southwestern Bell for large numbers of residential customers.

Rosemary Foreman, a spokeswoman for the Kansas Corporation Commission, said the current practice for Southwestern Bell's competitors is to buy calling time from the company and resell it to their own customers.

"As we have with all our other competitors, we welcome them to the marketplace," Southwestern Bell spokesman Mike Moffett said. "I'm sure they will be formidable competitors."

Atlanta-based Cox, which has more than 300,000 cable customers in Kansas, plans to add increased two-way communication capability and backup power to its fiber-optic network to accommodate the phone traffic, said Martin Corcoran, director of regulatory affairs for the company.

When all the pieces are in place, Cox will be able to offer television, high-speed Internet access, local phone service and long distance in a single package, Corcoran said.

He wouldn't give specifics on prices but said they would be competitive.

The local cable company started replacing its old system with a modern fiber-optic network in 1994, laying the groundwork for two-way communication.

A little less than a year ago, it began offering high-speed Internet service, said Ron Marnell, Cox's vice president for Kansas.

Cox bought the Wichita cable TV system, formerly Multimedia Cablevision, from Gannett Co. as part of a $2.7 billion acquisition of systems in Kansas, Oklahoma and North Carolina. That deal closed Feb. 1.

World-famous Aikido instructor teaches seminar at Rec Complex

BY JENNIFER GIER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People from all over the United States met at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex on Saturday and Sunday for one reason — to practice the art of Aikido.

World-famous Aikido instructor, also known as a sensei, Yoshimitsu Yamada, taught the group at the fourth annual Aikido Seminar.

Yamada, ranked an eighth degree dan in Aikido, is famous around the world for instructing people in the art of Aikido. While Sensei Yamada lives in New York, he has taught students of Aikido as far as Chili, Mexico, France, Japan, Germany, Spain and Portugal. He has been the instructor at the Aikido Seminar for the past three years, and people have come from as far as New York and California to perform the art with him.

Aikido, which originated around the time of World War II, was created by Morihei Ueshiba. Chad Lindsay, former K-State student and Topeka police officer, said the art is practiced worldwide. Lindsay has been practicing Aikido for four years.

"The art takes different styles and shows how to defend yourself without hurting your attacker," Lindsay said.

Lindsay said Aikido is not only a way to learn to defend yourself, but is also a good way to relieve stress, meet people and exercise. He said he practices Aikido because it relieves stress from work and life in general.

Aikido is not regularly taught at the Rec Complex, but students of the art come together from 7 to 9 p.m. each Monday, Wednesday and Friday to practice at Nichols Hall. The group of about 25 students is taught by Jack Hayes. Hayes has taught Aikido at K-State since 1994. Hayes started practicing Aikido in 1974 for a few months and began practicing again in 1985.

Last semester the class was counted for credit, but this semester the class is not. Hayes said if it hadn't been for the Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance, the class would not have continued in its existence.

"I'm really grateful to the department for providing space to practice for many years," Hayes said. "Practicing Aikido would not have been possible if it was not for the department."

Lindsay said due to the difficulty of Aikido, it is hard to keep people interested in the art.

"Aikido is hard to learn and requires a lot of patience," he said. "People leave the class because they lack the patience required to learn Aikido. Most people don't give Aikido enough time."

Aikido is similar to karate, Lindsay said. Both art forms have different levels of skill. Students interested in practicing Aikido can contact Jack Hayes in Nichols. The cost is $25 a month for students.

TWO SIDES TO EVERY STORY

K-State's Petra Sedlmajerova wipes the sweat from her brow during a break in her match with Iowa State's Noortje Cornelissen Saturday morning in Ahearn Field House.

Tennis team off to best Big 12 Conference start ever despite some struggles

The No. 32-ranked K-State tennis team dominated Iowa State in their match Saturday afternoon in Ahearn Field House.

The Cats (11-4, 5-0) netted a 9-0 shut-out over the Cyclones (4-9, 0-7) and lost just seven games combined in their three doubles matches.

However, despite the one-sided play, K-State head coach Steve Bietau said the score doesn't always reflect what truly happens on the court. For instance, No. 49 ranked Petra Sedlmajerova won the No. 1 singles match 6-3, 6-1, but her play was not necessarily stellar.

"Her match was one that I was not all that pleased with," Bietau said. "The score doesn't reflect the level of play. She still struggles to have a basic grasp of technical things."

Another K-State player who struggled despite winning was Eva Novotna at the No. 4 singles. Novotna won the match in three sets, 4-6, 6-3, 7-6, but she could have won more convincingly, Bietau said.

"Eva didn't play a smart match," Bietau said. "Sometimes you fight fire with fire, but sometimes you have to fight fire with water, and Eva couldn't find the water. She played to the girl's strengths."

Cats lose series with Texas Tech

By SAM STIERS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State pitching was bombarded for 37 runs in its three-game series against Texas Tech.

K-State (9-19) played one game Saturday and two on Sunday against Big 12 opponent Texas Tech (20-16). The Cats were swept over the weekend, losing 19-7 in the first game and 9-2 in both games of Sunday's doubleheader. K-State is now 0-6 all-time at Dan Law Field in Lubbock, Texas.

The losses drop K-State to 1-12 in Big 12 games, while Texas Tech improved its conference record to 9-6. The Cats also fell to 0-9 on the road for the season.

The Cats were plagued by mistakes all weekend. The pitching staff issued 11 walks during Saturday's game and 13 walks during Sunday's doubleheader. The Cats' defense also struggled, committing 10 errors during the weekend.

Texas Tech led the entire game on Saturday scoring six runs in the first inning and 13 runs before the Cats drove in their first run in the top of the fifth inning. Texas Tech had 16 hits in the game, including three home runs and six doubles. K-State pitcher Todd Lundwall started for the Cats and got the loss, falling to 1-1 on the season.

K-State did not fare any better on Sunday. In the first game of the doubleheader, K-State led going into the fifth inning. The Red Raiders tied the game at one in the bottom of the fifth. Texas Tech took the lead in the sixth, 2-1, and the Cats were within one run until the Red Raiders exploded for seven runs in the

UConn claims women's NCAA title

By CHUCK SCHOFFNER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — Connecticut had too much talent, too much depth and too many quick hands. And now the Huskies have something else as well: a second national championship.

With an impressive display of ball-hawking defense and efficient, balanced offense — the foundation of UConn's play all season — the Huskies overwhelmed Tennessee 71-52 Sunday night to win the women's NCAA title.

The top-ranked Huskies (36-1) beat No. 2 Tennessee for the second time in three meetings this season and did it in a way that left the Lady Vols (33-4) dazed and looking helpless.

Tennessee was in the Final Four for the 12th time and was seeking its seventh national championship. The Lady Vols could offer little more than token opposition to the UConn machine, which completed an impressive run through the NCAA Tournament.

No one in the tournament came closer than 15 points to the Huskies, whose only loss was a 72-71 setback Feb. 2 to Tennessee.

Tennessee played without starting guard Kristen Clement, an emotional leader and one of the team's most experienced players. Clement sprained her right ankle during a drill at practice Sunday morning and despite undergoing a full day of treatment, she wasn't able to go.

Her absence deprived one of the players who Coach Pat Summitt had planned to rotate on Connecticut point guard Sue Bird in an effort to slow Connecticut's dynamic offense. Kyra Elzy, a strong defender, started in Clement's place and scored eight points.

Bird, who had scored 19 points in a semifinal victory over Penn State, kept playing after jamming her right index finger in the first half and did not have one of her better games, finishing with four points.

With Connecticut contesting almost every shot, Tennessee started 1-for-13 from the field, yet trailed only 9-4. But when Asjha Jones hit a turnaround shot in the lane with 14:28 left, UConn took off.

A 12-2 run that included three baskets by Jones opened it up. When she hit another turnaround at the 7:49 mark, Connecticut led 21-6, and Tennessee had only two field goals — and seven turnovers. That was not in Summitt's game plan.

Connecticut led by as many as 27 points, and only a late rush saved Tennessee from a season-low point total.

Shea Ralph made a layup, then drove into the lane, jump stopped, faked once and banked the ball softly off the glass. Kelly Schumacher followed with a jumper, and Ralph fired a two-handed overhead pass to Svetlana Abrosimova for a wide-open layup.

That made it 40-19, and if it wasn't apparent before, it was then: this one was going into the books for Connecticut.

Men's tourney down to Spartans, Gators

By JIM O'CONNELL
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Michigan State and Florida both started the season in the Top 10 and never dropped far below. Now they're the only teams left.

Similarities over. While the Spartans are most effective in a half-court game, where they can crash the boards and be physical, the Gators prefer to play at warp speed, using a 10-man rotation and full-court pressure.

The teams meet at 8:18 tonight in the national title match.

Michigan State (31-7) was the only No. 1 seed to reach the Final Four and has lived up to the role in its bid for the national championship. The Spartans won every game in the NCAA Tournament by at least 11 points, including Saturday night's 53-41 victory over Wisconsin.

Florida, seeded fifth, got a first-round scare from Butler before wearing down higher-seeded teams — Illinois, top-ranked Duke and Oklahoma State — with its hectic pace. The Gators (29-7) used the same style to end North Carolina's surprising run with a 71-59 win Saturday night.

"We like to run, too," Michigan State coach Tom Izzo said. "Maybe some of that is our style also. ... I think we have an understanding for that. I think these guys want to run, too."

The Spartans can get up and down the court, having scored more than 80 points nine times this season. In the tournament, however, they have averaged 68.2, with the five starters averaging between 27 and 35 minutes a game and only two reserves averaging more than 10.

Florida has averaged 79.4 points in the five tournament games, just off its 84.1 mark for the season. The 10 Gators who create all that havoc on the floor average between 13 and 31 minutes a game.

Michigan State starts three seniors, while Florida has one on the team and plays seven sophomores and freshmen in the rotation.

"Our youthfulness has won us a lot of basketball games this year," said Kenyan Weeks, Florida's lone member of the Class of 2000. "I don't know if that's going to be a big problem in this game."

The Spartans were going to use an age-old method to prepare for Florida's full-court press tonight.

"We always go against six or seven guys in practice, and I'm sure we'll have a bunch of players out there today," Michigan State forward Andre Hutson said Sunday.

Florida coach Billy Donovan says he believes people are getting the wrong impression about his team.

"People think it's just running and jacking up three-point shots," Donovan said. "We put a tremendous emphasis on guarding the three-point line. Basically, every team in the country, when they go to practice, is going to practice their half-court offense. We try to be as disruptive as possible and take teams out of what they practice on a regular basis."

One key to breaking Florida's press will be senior point guard Mateen Cleaves

Baseball opener overrides finale of NCAA tourney

This is what it all comes down to — it's April 3, and even with the national title game tonight, all I can think of is baseball.

Yes, opening day, the big show. It is a day filled with hope and so many questions to ponder.

Will John Rocker make it out of New York when the Atlanta Braves visit to take on the New York Mets?

That might be perhaps the greatest question of all, and if the Braves felt New York was a difficult place to play last year, I imagine they can multiply the difficulty level by 100 this year. In other words, don't expect Atlanta to sweep any series in New York.

Will the Kansas City Royals go .500, and will center fielder Carlos Beltran continue to emerge as one of the American League's top players?

The Royals can go .500 this season, but it all hinges on their bullpen. The signing of repaired closer Ricky Bottalico is a good start. Still, it is hard to get excited about the acquisition when he has struggled since his surgery.

The acquisition either will make everyone forget about the atrocious bullpen the team had last season, or it will make fans beg for fresh arms.

As far as Beltran goes, he will be the starting center fielder in the American League All-Star line-up. Beltran has so much grace and ability that he should become one of the league's top stars. I just hope he plays those games for the "boys in blue." Beltran could become Kansas City's next big star, and he could own the town the way Hall of Famer George Brett once did.

The unanswered questions radiate throughout baseball to places such as Chicago. If you are a Chicago Cubs fan and your team hasn't won a pennant in 92 years, you probably figure, why bother? That is the beauty of baseball — you still believe your team can win.

If you are a Montreal Expos fan, you still believe that your team can win, all two of you. The reason is simple. The marathon begins today, and anything can happen.

Will the new season bring another home-run chase? Will it bring a new owner to the Royals, or will the team rot in peril? Let's hope for the sake of Kansas City that David Glass is approved in April.

He is the right man for the job, and Royals general manager Herk Robinson has worked too long and hard to make this team respectable for the owners to slap Kansas City in the face again. Miles Prentice, the one-time prospective owner of the Royals, was robbed of his chance to run the franchise. We can not let the same thing happen to Glass.

That likely will be one of the first great stories to envelop newspapers this season, but here are a few other predictions on what will happen in the year 2000 of Major League Baseball. (Editor's note: these predictions are subject to change, and I reserve the right to change my opinion at a moment's notice.)

■ Teams who will not win the World Series.

Everyone in Major League Baseball, with the exception of the New York Yankees. Now, granted, the Yankees are getting older, but I still believe they have one of the top rotations in all of baseball. The thing that makes them the best is they are always looking to upgrade and will at any cost.

■ The winner of the small-market World Series (those teams with a payroll under $35 million).

The Montreal Expos, and yes I know it sounds strange, but the Expos have increased their payroll to $30 million, and their starting pitching is drastically underrated. It could be a fun year for the Expos, but I think it sucks that for baseball fans to enjoy the game, they have to invent different categories of champions.

■ Winner of the home-run-derby league (a.k.a. the National League Central).

As much as it kills me to say this, I like the St. Louis Cardinals in this race. The acquisition of center fielder Jim Edmonds gives them a legitimate shot to win the Central. They also have one of the game's dominant managers in Tony LaRussa.

There are too many unknowns surrounding the Cincinnati Reds to pick them. How well will they be able to play with Ken Griffey Jr. and the media circus in their faces?

The Cubs, well, they are still the Cubs. Enough said.

■ This year's coolest new ball yard.

Without much doubt, it is Pacific Bell Park in San Francisco. It looks to be a park designed with the fans in mind. It is a place where a Barry Bonds-lined shot to right field likely will land in the water. Yes it is a pretty cool idea, but let's just hope the baseballs are dolphin-safe.

Let the games begin

With the preseason observations behind us, only one thing seems to be missing, popcorn and peanuts — enjoy the season.

Students find living arrangement, work at K-State's purebred beef unit

PHOTOS BY JEFF COOPER ■ STORY BY RHONDA NIDA

Living arrangements can be one of the biggest hassles students face in college.

For the men who work at the beef unit, however, housing is the easiest part of their college life.

"My mom went nuts when she found out where I was living this year," said Andy LeDoux, senior in animal science and industry. "It's not a four-star hotel. It's a barn, but it doesn't bother me to live there."

Students who work at the purebred beef barn said they take pride in their job. Kyle Colyer, senior in animal science and industry, said he feels he is carrying on a tradition that means a lot to an older generation of animal science faculty and cattle breeders across the nation.

"It's fun to talk to people who say they have worked there," Colyer said. "Those people ask what is going on, and how things have changed since they've been here. Part of the reason I work here is to be around industry leaders. They have an impact on the industry, and I like to think I can keep going what they started."

In addition to student employees, the purebred beef barn is home to more than 200 Angus, Simmental and Hereford cattle. The men are allowed to keep their own horses at the unit, as well as their pets.

"For me, the advantages are that I can keep my dog there, I don't have to drive to work, and it's close to campus," Colyer said. "And I don't know of anyone on campus who has a bigger house than us."

"I don't know the dimensions, but it's pretty huge. At night, if you don't know what it is and the lights are turned on, it almost looks like a mansion," he said.

A daily routine for LeDoux includes waking up at 7 a.m. to feed calves and coming back to do more work between classes. Chores usually take anywhere from an hour and a half to three hours twice each day, depending on what there is to be done, LeDoux said.

"Right now is probably the busiest time for us," he said. "We are putting in embryos to start a fall calving program and doing some other new things. After I studied for a test today, I unloaded hay during the afternoon. There is always something to do."

LeDoux said one advantage to living at the purebred beef barn is the people he is able to meet.

"If there's any kind of connection you would ever want with industry people, it's here," he said. "Everything from pharmaceutical reps to judging teams and coaches to bull buyers."

Another advantage is being able to apply the lessons he learns in animal science classes, LeDoux said. He said he plans to return home to his family farm after graduation this May.

"The greatest thing I get from this is that it's kind of like a vacation," LeDoux said. "You don't have the stress in worrying that it's your own place. And it keeps me tuned up for the big show for once I get home."

Colyer said he is learning lots of skills he can take back to his family's Hereford ranch in Idaho. He said his family has donated bull semen to the purebred barn, and everyone works to improve the genetic quality of the cattle.

"At home, I haven't been around Simmental cattle," he said. "It is also a lot different territory-wise and to see the different cattle in the Midwest. Anytime you can work around cattle, you're always learning something new, no matter what you're doing. It improves your own skills in this business."

Seeing how new lines of genetics work on the Angus cattle at the barn, as well as learning about synchronized breeding programs, has been helpful to improving the quality of his family's farm, Colyer said.

"Looking at some of the calves produced here, I was able to go home and tell Dad to use a certain bull on our cows," he said. "I had never been around any synchronization programs. Here, we synchronize all the cows and heifers."

LeDoux said the tradition of producing quality cattle at K-State is important to him as well.

"It's nice to think we are keeping production agriculture going," he said. "There's not too many people doing it anymore. It's fun to be a part of something that's been going on for so long. We are just adding our contributions to the mix."

The history of the purebred beef barn and the students who have lived there is like being part of a team, Colyer said.

"After I graduate, I would do things to keep it going here," he said. "Part of the reason I came to K-State is to be able to surround myself with what I would consider some of the industry's leaders. It's kind of like being able to play basketball with Michael Jordan."

Miles McKee, professor of animal science and industry, said there is a long waiting list of students who want to work at the purebred barn. He also said there is a respect among animal science faculty for the students who work at the various livestock units.

"It is a tradition," he said. "There is an honor to be associated with the great livestock industry leaders who used to work there. These are typical young men, trying to work in college and make money, and also trying to study and take tests."

LeDoux and Colyer said in order to get a job at the purebred beef barn, a student must have some livestock background as well as common sense.

"You've got to have background and knowledge," LeDoux said. "By this time, you better have figured it out. That's why you come here to do it."

Skills students are able to use include their knowledge of artificial insemination. LeDoux said if they have taken a class on it, they might be responsible for inseminating 40-50 cows during breeding season.

Work has to be done at the purebred beef barn even during school holidays, Colyer said.

"On weekends, a lot of kids go home or whatever, and you might have to stay and feed," he said. "Cattle still need to be fed, even on Thanksgiving and Christmas breaks. We have to kind of divide up the schedule and make sure things get done."

Students make minimum wage at the purebred beef barn, with no raise option, and can work a maximum of 30 hours each week. Though the money isn't good and the hours are long, Colyer and LeDoux said they have few expenses.

Rent and bills for the apartment at the purebred beef barn are taken out of their paychecks, McKee said. They said they don't really care about the money.

"We would do it for a lot less than that," LeDoux said. "It's for convenience. For us, doing what we are doing is like making pizzas for some guys. If I was delivering pizza, I'd want a lot more than minimum wage."

Colyer said a disadvantage is that sometimes he gets a little lonely at the apartment.

"I am the only one who lives there, because my roommates have girlfriends," Colyer said.

"The barn is lonely at night. If there are any single girls out there, applications are being taken."

Protestors want Confederate Flag removed

By BRUCE SMITH
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, S.C. — More than 600 people set out Sunday on a five-day, 120-mile protest march to Columbia to urge state lawmakers to move the Confederate flag from the Statehouse dome.

"Take it down!" some marchers chanted.

"The people of South Carolina — white and African-American — want the flag to come down," said Charleston Mayor Joseph P. Riley Jr., who had the idea for the march.

"The purpose is to say the people of South Carolina are in step, and we want the legislature to get in step with the people of South Carolina," said the mayor, who carried the blue state flag with its white palmetto tree and crescent as he led marchers into the street.

The marchers will walk only during daylight hours and plan to arrive in Columbia for a rally on Thursday, when flag supporters also have scheduled a Statehouse rally.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has called for a tourism boycott of the state, saying the Confederate flag above the Statehouse in Columbia is a racist emblem. Flag defenders say it is a symbol of Southern heritage and honors Confederate war dead.

Only state lawmakers can move the flag from the dome, and several plans are under consideration. Organizers of the "Get in Step" walk say it should be moved from the dome to a place of honor.

Vans and shuttle buses will take people to the march so they can join for as long as they can. It will start each day where it ended the previous day.

Novelist Pat Conroy, a South Carolinian, was on hand for the start of the march. But he said he would join the marchers again Thursday in Columbia.

"They would find me dead on the highway if I tried to make the entire march," he said.

Conroy said South Carolina lawmakers do not like being told what to do but predicted the march will help resolve the issue.

"It's going to be such hideous publicity, including this right here, that it will help," he said.

One of those who marched Sunday was former Gov. John West, a state lawmaker when the flag was raised by the all-white 1962 General Assembly.

West, who served as governor from 1971 to 1975, led an effort to get lawmakers who raised the flag to ask for its removal.

"As I have had to say publicly, somewhat to my embarrassment, in hindsight one of the mistakes I made as governor is not taking it down," he said. "It was not an issue then. Had it been an issue, I would like to think I would have taken it down."

Paula Byers of James Island said she had two great-grandfathers who fought for the South in the Civil War.

"The Confederate flag is my heritage, but it should have been taken down at the end of the Civil War," she said.

There was a single pro-flag demonstrator as the marchers left a park on the edge of the city's historic district after a brief rally.

Novotna and Sedlmajerova did win their matches, though, and Bietau said he was happy with the two players and the team's performance.

"You can't beat somebody better than 9-0," Bietau said. "At least in terms of the score, we did everything possible against Iowa State. It wasn't a perfect match, but it was a good match for us."

While some matches were less than perfect, there also were some bright spots. Natalia Farmer's 6-4, 6-2 win at No. 6 singles ended a personal seven-match losing streak.

The most impressive area for K-State was the play of its doubles teams. All three doubles matches were quick and decisive in favor of the Cats, Bietau said.

"It was a dominant performance," he said.

It was the sixth time this season that K-State has swept doubles play, and the Cats won all six of those dual matches. The doubles wins are even more striking when compared to the team's play last fall, Bietau said.

"We saw Iowa State's doubles in the fall, and I thought that they looked better than we did," Bietau said. "From that standpoint, it shows how much progress we've made."

With this win under their belt, the Cats will move on to a more formidable opponent when they meet No. 56 Kansas at 3 p.m. Wednesday in Ahearn. K-State will look to extend what is its best conference start ever.

bottom of the seventh. Chad Duckers (2-3) pitched well for most of the game but picked up the loss after allowing four runs in 6 1/3 innings.

Texas Tech exploited the Cats' mistakes early in the second game of the double header. The Red Raiders drew three walks and capitalized on a pass ball and an error to score two runs in the first inning on no hits.

K-State scored one run in both the third and fourth innings keeping the game close at 4-2. The Red Raiders again would jump on Wildcat pitching in the seventh inning, scoring four runs and putting the game out of reach.

Luke Robertson pitched six innings for the Cats in the second game. He would get the loss, falling to 2-6 on the season.

The Cats' next game will be Friday at home against Oklahoma State.

"You never have a chance to relax," he said.

"The main thing for the game is you can't change your attitude."

Florida's subs have scored 175 points in the tournament, 132 more than Michigan State's.

"I do think we need to get more scoring out of our bench, and I think we have the potential," Izzo said. "As far as wearing us down, I think we'll utilize our bench enough so it doesn't."

Donovan won't change a thing. "We're going to play our guys like we normally have, and I don't know if we'll be able to wear Michigan State down," he said. "We have to just try and play our style."

Michigan State is trying to become the first Big Ten team to win the national championship since Michigan in 1989. The Spartans' only national championship came in 1979 when Magic Johnson led them to the title as a sophomore.

The Spartans are in the Final Four for the second straight year. They lost to Duke in the semifinals last season.

"That was cool, but we went home empty-handed," Cleaves said. "It's great to get here, but you'll always be remembered as a national champion."

The Wilkinsons are here and now

Album's lyrics describe struggle of finding love

By REED DUNN

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Right from the beginning, The Wilkinsons' new album "Here and Now" offers promising things for those listening.

"Jimmy's Got a Girlfriend" is the first song on the group's sophomore album, showcasing the mature sounds of Amanda and Tyler Wilkinson. As a single, the song already has generated much of the radio play it deserves.

The next nine songs on the compact disc are split between the brother and sister on who takes the lead vocal.

One of the few criticisms the group got with its first album, "Nothing But Love," was Amanda always took lead and Tyler was lost in the background.

On this album Tyler's talent definitely is brought to the foreground with fresh, mature sounds.

"Don't Look at Me Like That" is the best example of what he can do and is one of the best tracks on the album.

Amanda's best work to the follow-up of her success with "26 cents" from the first album is "I'll Know Love."

The lyrics provide a story about the struggle of finding love and the path of mistakes that must be made to find true love.

Amanda and Tyler also take a chance at song writing in co-writing "It Was Only a Kiss," with the help of pop writer Robin Wiley. The idea for the song came after Tyler had watched "The Mummy."

As on the last album, Steve lets his children's singing talents take the front row as he sings background with the exception of the final track. His talent is continued through his songwriting, having credit for six of the songs on the new project.

"The Only Rose" is the best of the father's writings on the album. Co-written with Steve Warner, the two share the microphone for lead vocals of the final track. The story behind the song was inspired by the Columbine High School shootings, but does not focus on the tragedy.

Instead, the song takes a new look at the theme of being different.

Most of the other songs on the album are songs Wilkinsons fans will learn to love. The one exception is "Hypothetically." The song is compared to the work of the Beatles, which is obviously a stretch for this Canadian-family trio.

All in all, the album is full of great work from the group and deserves attention.

With "Here and Now," the group is sure to add to the 22 award nominations they earned with "Nothing But Love."

The Wilkinsons
"Here and Now"

Film builds tension in fresh ways, breaks from plot-twist norms

By KELLY FURNAS

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Although the set up of "The Skulls" is relatively formulated, the movie takes some pretty good departures from the norm of thriller movies.

That's not to say the movie is completely unpredictable.

On the contrary, there are a lot of punches (both literally and figuratively) the viewer sees coming.

However, "The Skulls" follows a different method than most thrillers of building and easing tension — relying less on cloak-and-dagger scenes and more on situational problems that characters have to solve.

Joshua Jackson plays an Ivy League college student who gains entry to a secret society that includes senators and judges. Although thrust into a world of wealth and power, he begins to question his loyalty to the Skulls following the mysterious death of his friend who was investigating the secret society.

If you've heard the premise of being surrounded by corrupt white men before, either one, you're in a fraternity; or two, you saw the movie

"The Firm."

Although the premise has been used before, this movie has plenty of original content.

In fact, this movie's best quality is that it doesn't have a lot of the plot twists that are standard in thriller movies.

For example, the viewer truly does not know who to trust throughout the movie (although some of the untrustworthy characters are pretty apparent).

The most unfortunate aspect of the movie is the climax. Instead of being unpredictable, the ending is just ridiculous.

Although it resolves the conflicts in the movie, it strongly tests the viewer's ability to put up with the believability of the secret society.

From an acting standpoint, "The Skulls" delivers neither remarkable nor damaging performances. Everyone plays their part well, but no one really stands out.

What does stand out, although many viewers will not notice it, is the distinctive camera use throughout the film.

This movie is beautifully lit, with soft glows gracing the set and characters. However, in a thriller like this, such lighting effects might be out of place.

"The Skulls" is not a tremendous movie, but does what it sets out to do — make the viewer tense and eager to see what happens to the movie's characters.

Poor execution, characters destroy premise, plot developments of 'Here on Earth'

By KELLY FURNAS

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Attention high school men: the way to get a girl is simple. First, wax all of the hair off your body save scalp and eyebrows. Second, know one Robert Frost poem.

"Here on Earth," perhaps the worst of all movies ever aimed at high school students, deserves such a billing because of characters that take the term "shallow" to entirely new limits.

Leelee Sobieski plays Samantha, a rural town girl with a steady boyfriend named Jasper (Josh Hartnett). When rich-boy Kelley (Chris Klein) comes joy riding into town, he and Jasper accidentally destroy a local diner, and a judge forces them to rebuild the restaurant. As time passes, Samantha finds herself attracted to the waxy-looking Kelley, creating a tense love triangle.

Actually, the premise of "Here on Earth" is relatively intriguing. Some of the plot developments are interesting, too. But the execution of this movie is so horribly poor, seeing as how none of the characters have any development whatsoever.

Sobieski is somewhat charming, but plays a character who makes despicable and illogical choices throughout the movie. Klein is dry in this film, regardless of what emotion the scene is dictating. His character, Kelley, has no redeeming qualities in this movie, which creates problems for a storyline that requires the viewer to find him appealing.

It's not just that Samantha makes the wrong decisions in this movie (although most viewers will think she does), it's that the movie offers no believable explanations for her decisions.

This movie has other problems besides character development, however. There is no attention to details in this film. For example, Samantha continuously has to go to the doctor because of a knee injury, but apparently can't ask or be told why. This is a relatively important aspect of the film, too.

Someone could probably take the idea of "Here on Earth" and remake the movie into a great film. Until then, all audiences should steer clear of this title.

OPEN HOUSE

ment K-State has to offer.

"The open house is a tremendous K-State tradition," Bosco said. "It is very exciting because it is unique to our campus."

Bosco said 2,500 K-State students and faculty members helped put on the open house.

"You can't find another program that involves that many people in an all-university experience," Bosco said.

Bosco said that although it has been in existence for 22 years, individual colleges have put on open houses for many years.

"About 23 years ago we got together and decided that we needed to make it bigger," Bosco said. "It turned into what we see now, and it works wonderfully."

Marla Johnson, junior in public relations and arts and sciences ambassador, said she spent the day in the Union helping people find different academic majors within the College of Arts and Sciences and thought the entire day went great.

"I have talked with a wide variety of people — from current students and prospective students to parents," Johnson said. "I think the open house really helps students to get comfortable with K-State and see that there is something for everyone and many interesting things on our campus."

Bosco said one of the first things students said they enjoyed about the open house is the smiles on the students' faces.

"Of course looking at an academic program is the highest priority for students when coming to the open house, but also seeing how the campus feels is a priority, and the open house does a great job of showing how good our campus is," he said. "There are so many people that put time and effort into making the open house a success."

"The open house was a window that portrayed K-State as a place that feels good and friendly, and that is what we wanted to accomplish."

it at all," he said. "When I put my time in, I thought 'I'm not going to win anything.'"

Although he knew he was a winner, he said not knowing what he had won made him anxious.

"It was nerve-racking standing up there as long as we were before they announced the winners of the prizes," Boothe said.

Dowell said Telefund 2000 was a great success because of the students, alumni and business partners involved.

"There's a network of people on campus that really make it work," he said.

He said although this year was a huge success, breaking more than 12 records and bringing in a record number of people for the presentation, it is time to start focusing on next year's Telefund.

"It's time to start planning for 2001," he said. "As the theme says, 'It never ends.'"

TOURNEY

"I'm not sure how much money we raised," Johnson said. "I'll have to figure it after expenses — like gym and ball rental."

Boucher said money came from entrance fees and sponsorship agreements with local businesses. T-shirts also were provided for all the participants, Boucher said.

Everyone at the tournament agreed that the event should be repeated next year.

"There was good participation from all the houses," Boucher said. "We plan on doing this again next year."

BLOOD DRIVE

850 units, but she said she thinks it would be marvelous to get 1000 units this time.

Milldyke said giving blood on campus usually takes about 45 minutes, and the best time to donate is late morning or mid-afternoon.

If a donor is really pressed for time, a good place to go is the recreation complex. Last semester it was the least-busy location, Van Meter said.

Milldyke said those who are hesitant to give blood or who have had bad experiences in the past should not have any problems if they drink more fluids and eat regularly before they come to donate.

"The most trouble we have with students is they need to drink more pints of water or fruit juice before they come in," she said. "Beer doesn't count."

Sarah Bailey, senior in speech and seven-time donor, said the process is easy, and she feels good about herself after donating.

"The people are nice and you get free stuff," she said. "Afterwards, they give you drinks and doughnuts."

OUTDOOR WORKOUTS

Tired of your winter workout? Getting cabin fever? Spring is in the air, so give your workout a makeover, and move it outside. There are so many different outdoor workout options to suit anyone. If intramurals get your heart pumping, then head on out to the outdoor playfields. In the spring, the six football fields and soccer field are transformed into eight softball fields. The lighted sand volleyball courts adjacent to the playfields are available year-round. In addition, lighted tennis courts, handball/racquetball courts, a basketball court and horseshoe pits are located east of the Rec Complex.

If you'd rather get your workout in a non-competitive atmosphere, check out the Fitness Cluster just west of the Rec Complex. The Fitness Cluster features a four series workout consisting of stretching and strengthening activities including chin ups, push ups, body curls, leg hops, hand-walks and bench leg raises. Another area for outdoor activity at the Rec is the quarter- or half-mile walking/jogging trail that winds around the west side of the Rec Complex. It gives you the opportunity to exercise in a peaceful setting.

This spring, enjoy the Rec while enjoying the warm weather.

Fitness Facts

Playing just one sport or performing only one type of exercise is likely to strengthen certain muscles at the expense of others, leaving some tendons and ligaments weak and vulnerable. Vary your activities to prevent muscle imbalance and injury.

Nutrition Notes

For maximum energy and efficiency, your body needs food before and after exercise. Before exercise, avoid foods high in fat. Fat takes longer to digest, so your body pulls needed blood from your exercising muscles to break down the food in your digestive system. This will cause you to be less effective and have less energy. It is best to eat foods like apples, pears, oatmeal or brown rice one hour before exercising. You need to replenish glycogen stores about 15-30 minutes after exercise. Good foods for this are bananas, a bagel, or a baked potato.

Student Senate passed a resolution in September 1999 stating 13 goals it would like to accomplish in the 1999-2000 term.

Jake Worcester, Student Senate chair and student body president-elect, said he thinks Senate was successful in accomplishing most of those goals.

There were only two goals that Worcester said he felt weren't accomplished: increasing awareness of social services on campus and better educating the student body about privilege fees.

"I think that with trying to accomplish everything else, they were probably put on the back burner," he said. "They are also very ambiguous and very hard to judge if anything really was accomplished."

Besides accomplishing most of its set goals, Worcester said Senate did a good job of working with other branches of government and committees to find solutions to problems.

"A lot of items didn't seem to be controversial and didn't have a lot of debate, and most issues passed overwhelmingly," he said. "That shows that students worked during the committee process to find a solution that everyone can buy-in to."

Senate Operations Chair Dustin Petrik also said the committees made Senate meetings more efficient.

He said when he entered Student Senate as an intern his freshman year, it was unusual for meetings to end before midnight.

"So much seemed to be done on the Senate floor," he said. "I think what we've come to in the last two years is that we shifted the role of Senate doing stuff on the Senate floor to actually moving that stuff to committee."

"Our Thursday-night meetings have really gotten much more efficient. We generally finished by 10."

There was an exception to Senate meetings ending by 10 p.m., though. The last meeting before spring break lasted until 2

President, vice president end term, reflect on performance

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It started off with a campaign platform of increasing Internet benefits, restructuring the schedule of finals week, expanding the residence hall food program and changing the deadline for students who want to drop classes giving them more time to get a full refund.

Now Student Body President Jason Heinrich and Vice President Gabe Eckert have ended their term with most of their platform goals and other goals reached.

Heinrich said it's tough to decide what he and Eckert's biggest accomplishment was.

"It depends on who you ask," he said.

People who have been around campus for a while probably would say that transportation was their biggest accomplishment, Heinrich said.

"We did a lot to advance the concept of transportation," he said. "We took it from ground zero to implementing a study."

Jake Worcester, student body president-elect and current Student Senate chair, said he also thought transportation was the

City picks 5 manager candidates

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A list of 65 applicants has been pared down to five candidates for Manhattan city manager.

Members of the Manhattan City Commission met with representatives of the Illinois-based Par Group, who will help the city select a new manager, during a special executive session Monday night to discuss the résumés the city received for the city manager position.

The Par Group has acted as the commission's recruiting arm during this hiring time, Commissioner Ed Klimek said.

"The applications came from all over the country," Klimek said. "The Par Group said they were very satisfied with the quality of candidates."

Commissioner Bruce Snead said the group was given a list of qualifications the city commission desired in a new city manager.

"They reviewed the candidates according to a profile that was based on past profiles

Parking price might increase with shuttles

By JAMIE BARRETT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Prices for parking permits might be on the rise when the shuttle bus system is brought to campus.

Jason Heinrich, student body president, said the prices for parking permits might rise because it is one of the ways the shuttle bus system will be paid for.

"Plans are still in the implementation-study analysis stage," Heinrich said. "We have to think of ways to pay for the shuttle buses, and raising permit prices is logical."

Director of Parking Services Darwin Abbott said a price increase of $60 could occur.

"If we keep the parking situation we have now, there is no way we could add the extra parking and have the shuttle buses," Abbott said. "In some way we are going to have to raise prices somewhere."

Heinrich said a $60 price increase is the worst-case scenario.

"We had to offer a number when we made the proposal so we came up with a ball-park figure," Heinrich said. "In some way, the shuttle system will have to be paid for."

Heinrich said student fees will go up when the shuttle system is implemented, regardless of whether it is a parking permit increase.

"Other ways to pay for the system is to raise student privilege fees, but students would have to pay anyway for the bus passes," Heinrich said.

Abbott said the shuttle system was pro-

SPARTAN VICTORY

Michigan State earns title in NCAA championship against Florida Gators

By JIM O'CONNELL
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — This time there was no Magic, just Mateen. Michigan State, with Magic Johnson cheering in the stands, won its second national championship as Mateen Cleaves led the Spartans to an 89-76 victory over Florida on Monday night.

It was 21 years ago that the championship game between Michigan State and Indiana State "Magic vs. Bird" changed the landscape of college basketball.

This one might not have the magnitude, but it had the drama thanks to Cleaves, the Spartans' limping leader.

After helping the Spartans build a 43-32 halftime lead by scoring 13 points, including going 3-for-3 from three-point range and negating Florida's vaunted full-court pressure with his ballhandling and passing, Cleaves rolled his right ankle early in the second half and had to go to the locker room.

When he left with 16:18 to play, the Spartans led 50-44. His teammates got the lead to 58-50 by the time he returned 4:29 later. But the senior guard who missed the first 13 games of the season while recovering from a stress fracture in his right foot was again the team's emotional leader.

His long pass to Morris Peterson for a layup made it 60-50. He was leveled while setting a screen a few minutes later, but it was enough to spring A.J. Granger for a three-pointer that started a 16-6 run that made it 84-66 and put the game away.

Cleaves certainly didn't do it by himself. Peterson finished with 21 points on 7-for-14 shooting, and Granger had 19 and was 7-for-11 from the field. Cleaves was 7-for-11 from the field — all the shots coming before he was injured — and had 18 points and four assists.

The Spartans (32-7), the only top-seeded team to reach the Final Four, finished 33-for-59 from the field (56 percent), the best against Florida's frantic pace by far in the tournament. The previous best was 43 percent by top-ranked Duke in the regional semifinals.

Michigan State never seemed fazed by the pressure, beating it early with long passes. The Spartans were their usual efficient selves when they did run their halfcourt game, getting good looks and crashing the boards when they missed.

Udonis Haslem had a season-high 27 points for the fifth-seeded Gators (29-9), while Brent Wright added 13.

The 1979 final — the one that hooked the nation on the NCAA Tournament — is still the highest-rated telecast of an NCAA basketball game. Michigan State, which beat Wisconsin 53-41 in an ugly all-Big Ten national semifinal, won all six games on its title run by at least 11 points.

The Spartans closed the season with 11 straight wins and are the first Big Ten team to win it all since Michigan in 1989.

Florida, looking to become the fourth straight Southeastern Conference team to win the national championship in an even-numbered year, was making its first appearance in a championship game.

The Gators had seven freshmen and sophomores in their 10-man rotation and this was the first game in the tournament that their lack of experience showed.

JC skate park celebrates grand opening

By LINDA BYRD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 100 skaters competed in a skate tournament Saturday at the skate park in Junction City to celebrate its grand opening.

J.P. Redmond, who finished second in the 17-and-older skateboard competition, and other area youth are working toward expanding the park.

Profits from the concession stand at the tournament raised about $350 to that end. Area youth hope to raise $20,000 to build a half-pipe at the park, Jonathan Mitchell, tournament organizer, said.

"Anytime you bring people from outside your community it has benefits. The skate park is good for the city's image and economics," said Dan Wells, Junction City parks and recreation director.

The Junction City skate park was finished in January with the help of Jonathan Mitchell and several area teen-agers who raised funds for the park and a $40,000 trail grant awarded to Junction City from the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks.

Mitchell said he was surprised by how many skaters competed in the tournament.

"There were already more than 100 entries by the deadline on March 15. My phone has been ringing off the hook since then with more skaters wanting to enter, but I had to turn them away," Mitchell said.

Ten skaters were from out of state, 26 from Junction City and others were from various towns and cities throughout Kansas. There were four divisions in the tournament — 16 years old and younger skateboarders, 16 and younger rollerbladers, 17 and older skateboarders and younger roller-bladers.

Skaters were judged on a 10-point system with one being the lowest score and 10 being the highest.

The judges evaluated technical merit — how well a skater performs tricks and transitions and at what

MIKE SHEPHERD/COLLEGIAN

K-State's Dustin Mace, freshman in biology, tries to keep his balance in the semifinals of the 17-and-older roller blade skating competition Saturday in Junction City. The tournament was the grand opening to the skate park, which was built in January, said tournament organizer Jonathan Mitchell, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications.

skill level and style — how well a skater moves through the course. Up to five bonus points could be awarded for determination, effort and crowd interaction.

With songs such as "Freak on a Leash" and "Road Trippin'" thumping in the background, compliments of Manhattan's KSDB-FM 91.9, skaters had 1 1/2 minutes to impress the judges with a routine of jumps, kick flips, leaps of faith, rail slides, spins and fakes through a challenging course of slopes, rails and grinds.

While attempting some of the more difficult tricks, many of the skaters went into the air only to find themselves descending head long off a slope, landing on the pavement and injured with a serious dose of road rash.

Each contestant reaching the finals received a complete skate deck kit and a pair of soap shoes. Soap shoes have plastic soles so a skater can practice slide tricks on rails as they would with inline skates or a skateboard.

The first-place winner of each division received a trophy; the second and third-place winners received plaques.

For entering the tournament contestants were given skate T-shirts, CDs, bags, skate decks or something similar from the $4,000 in prizes that were donated by sponsors.

Photographers from Thrasher magazine attended the final round and took pictures of the park and the skaters to feature in Thrasher's

June issue.

After the tournament, everyone was invited to the Junction City Municipal Building for a free concert by Podstar of Manhattan and Kindir of Lawrence.

Lindsay Drosselmeyer, freshmen in pre-veterinary medicine, said the concert and tournament were a great way to bring communities together.

The number of people involved in the tournament shows that skating is not just a trend but is a sport that offers a lot of positive incentives, she said.

"Skating is a great alternative. It's a lot better than going out and doing the same old, same old and getting trashed," she said. "It's something different for youth other than the normal party scene."

Debate team snags 7th-place ranking out of 200 colleges

By STEPHANIE J. BONNELL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State debate team's national ranking was based on how well the freshmen and sophomores performed because there were no seniors on the squad, Susan Stanfield, director of debate, said.

The K-State debate squad is ranked seventh in the country out of about 200 colleges and universities. The award was announced at the National Championship Tournament, which took place in Kansas City, Mo., March 24-26.

"My favorite thing about the tournament was being among the top in the nation," Alex Garrett, freshman in political science, said.

The final ranking is based on a combination of tournament performances by K-State's debate team during the competitive year, which runs from late September to mid-March.

"As a squad, we accomplished most of the goals we set at the beginning of the season," Michael Shultz, freshman in speech, said.

The national championship featured 156 teams from 74 colleges and universities, including competitors from the Big Ten, Big 12, Pac-10, Ivy League, Southeast Conference and United States service academies.

Kyle Wilson, junior in chemical engineering, and Ben Sharp, freshman in secondary education, won a national title in non-policy debate. Their debate was on the topic "Whether or not economic embargoes are a justified tool of U.S. foreign policy."

"It was a lot of fun," Wilson said. "It was really exciting to get so far and do so well."

Katie Hatzivramidis, senior in pre-law and humanities, and Kevin Zollman, junior in philosophy, were named to the All-American squads during the national championships.

"It's a combination of two things — a successful year in debate and good grades," Hatzivramidis said.

After eight preliminary rounds of competition, K-State's debate team reached the elite round of 64 at the championships.

Since 1992, six K-State teams have reached the Sweet 16, four the Elite Eight, three the Final Four and two the Final Round.

"It is a big relief to be done for the year," Sharp said. "It was an interesting experience."

"As a squad, we accomplished most of the goals we set at the beginning of the season."

Student Senate fails to break free from status quo

The 1999-2000 Student Senate has completed its term without fulfilling the vast potential it seemed to possess.

While Senate has made some strides — most notably with the addition of online voting and increased cooperation within Senate — it has failed to reach the heights it seemed capable of attaining.

Because senators settled for the status quo — rather than taking initiative upon themselves and stepping forward to truly affect change on campus — the past year has been another lackluster year for student government.

Certainly Senate was not a complete disappointment. Senators proved capable of doing their jobs by dealing with relevant and valuable legislation in a competent manner throughout the year.

However, they failed to go the extra step to establish themselves as the exceptional Senate they seemed capable of becoming.

At the beginning of this year, a list of goals was established for Senate. Here are those goals and how they turned out.

■ Increase cooperation between SGA branches and committees.

This proved to be a strong point for Senate. Their cooperation made weekly meetings and legislation as painless as possible. This was a definite improvement over previous years, when debate was often long and inconsequential.

■ Increase awareness of social services on campus.

Student Senate chair Jake Worcester said this was one of the areas in which Senate failed. The issue was put on the backburner when the semester got busy.

■ Conduct community services programs that SGA participates in.

This year's Danceathon is an excellent first step toward this goal. If a success, it could provide a firm foundation on which to build.

■ Increase communication between SGA and the student body.

While a few half-hearted attempts were made toward this end, this goal flopped. Evidence is available in the form of student backlash from Senate decisions — including a smoking resolution proposed to City Commission.

■ Educate the student body better about privilege fees.

Worcester said Senate failed here, and he is correct. Granted, this will not be easy — privilege fees are confusing — but Senate failed to make significant progress toward this goal.

■ Complete the restructuring of the SGA Web page.

This project is complete, but its importance pales in comparison to some of those goals that were incomplete.

■ Research changes to the residence hall meal plan.

Research is complete, and the obvious answer was found — the idea was completely unfeasible.

The idea, however, originated from Student Body President Jason Heinrich, so Senate should not be faulted for its impossibility.

■ Establish online voting and increase technology services for students.

Heinrich and Elections Chair Travis Morgan are to thank for the implementation of online voting, although Senate did play a small role in making the switch — one whose time had come.

■ Research splitting finals week over a weekend.

This plan also came from Heinrich, and research found only mild support for it. However, Senate did a good job of letting the plan die when they found limited backing.

■ Adjust the tuition-reimbursement schedule.

Senate did a wonderful job of following through with Heinrich's plan to insure students would not be cheated out of money, and they now can receive a higher percentage of their tuition money back if they drop a class during the course of the semester.

■ Research the need of a city-wide or campus transportation plan.

This idea — long debated and long overdue — was brought forward by Heinrich, and Senate did a good job of assuring it continued its progression.

■ Strengthen relationships with

K-State-Salina students.

Salina students were allowed to vote in student body presidential elections once again. This was a huge stride toward making Salina students — always just outside of campus focus — one step closer to being in the mainstream.

■ Increase awareness of diversity on campus.

Senate made strides in this area, too, although expectations of a complete fix are ridiculous. Groundwork was laid, however.

Obviously, Senate has accomplished some important things this year. Overall, it did a good job.

However, a Senate with so much potential seemed destined to accomplish even more.

Perhaps the incoming Senate should look at the outgoing Senate and try to take something from it.

By settling for mediocrity, Senate fell short of the high expectations many had set for it.

SEX sells

Trip to L.A. reveals dirty use for sex as salesman

So does sex really sell? I am not talking about literal sales numbers here. That has been proven by the overwhelming popularity of Viagra.

Does sex sell — morally and ethically — in the world of advertising?

Recently, in the Los Angeles area, 1,400 billboards popped up, drawing questions from some California residents.

Ads promoting a new football team, the Los Angeles Avengers, feature explicit declarations of events to come Sunday.

Of course, I won't leave you hanging about what, exactly, these ads said. "On Sunday, April 9, six beautiful women will show you their panties."

"On Sunday, April 9, 12 men will go both ways."

"On Sunday, April 9, 69 will not be out of the question."

Now, I guess I can see how some people might be offended by this type of openness toward sex — especially since some of the billboards were posted near schools. But the Avengers' spokesman claims, "It was meant to be a bit of fun. It's an attention grabber — that's the nature of advertising."

This entire campaign was to introduce the new football team and give some initiative for fans to come to the opening game. I wonder if anyone will go see those beautiful women showing their panties? I wonder about as much as I wonder whether people have sex on the Internet.

But onto other sexual topics.

A Japanese condom maker has begun producing novelty chocolates in molds it uses to make high-quality contraceptives.

The chocolates are in the shape of animals and sumo wrestlers.

The chocolates are not selling well because consumers do not want to buy chocolates formed in rubber molds of the same rubber that condoms are made of.

I guess sex is not selling too well in this case, but this is rare. Maybe if they changed the molds into something other than animals?

Then we have, of course, naked women who up the sales of just about every single industry and business in the world.

Kathleen Turner portrays the infamous Mrs. Robinson in the play "The Graduate," which will open in England soon. Although the play does not officially open until Wednesday, some preview shows have been given in London. Turner wooed the audience and critics by baring all in her sexual scenes with the character who probably made Dustin Hoffman's career nearly 20 years ago.

Plainly put: she got naked.

Sex sells. She has been given rave reviews as an actress, deemed "theatrical Viagra" and sales for the upcoming run of the play are skyrocketing. What else could that theater company ask for?

I do not know if these crazy attempts at capturing an audience's attention are morally ahead of themselves or not. I do know the end of situations, such as the L.A. billboard saga, probably are not going to end anytime soon, so brace yourselves for future exposure to a little of the naughty.

What is sad about sex exposure is that women often are given a bad rap about their agreement to expose themselves.

Larry Flynt and Hugh Hefner are considered ingenious by most males in this country. They are admired as much as the women in their publications. If women agree to this sort of a career, more power to them.

TARYN FORT

Life is a choice, and everyone has their own to fill with mistakes and celebrations. I wish tastefulness became an issue when portrayal of the female body came into question. There is no way to stop females from exposing themselves. Altering and adjusting is all that can be offered as a consolation.

American culture is infamous for its sexual prowess. Clean it all up a bit, but do not move backward with censorship.

Sex sells when it comes down to it, and there is no getting away from such a marketable tool.

Sense of truth has become blurred since nation's beginning

The settlers who arrived at Virginia on the Mayflower might have been the smartest people our country ever has seen. They did not have the Internet, advanced medicine or state-of-the-art technology, but they clearly could see that God existed.

Not only did the majority of them believe in God, they were Christians.

This is explicitly documented in the Mayflower Compact, which was written Nov. 11, 1620 at Cape Cod as the first colony in northern Virginia was established. In the Mayflower Compact, it is stated, "Having undertaken for the Glory of God, and Advancement of the Christian Faith, and the Honour of our King and Country, a Voyage to plant the first Colony in the northern Parts of Virginia."

Since that time, our country slowly has abandoned its faith and trust in God and searched for answers elsewhere.

The problem is that we have used our God-given intellect, but forgotten where it came from.

Somewhere along the way, we have abandoned the simple truth that we come from our creator, and replaced reality with fabrication.

The concept of an eternal God who loves us is too much for a lot of critical thinkers to handle, so they disregard it and call it a lie. We can deny the existence of God on paper, but one look outside at the beauty of nature, or one pondering of the complexity of the human body sends us back to the drawing board to conjure up something more satisfying than ignorant disbelief.

We either dismiss God the father altogether and say we evolved from nothing, or we conjure up theories and hypotheses that, in the end, determine our search is over: we are God.

In 1933, a group of people who knew that a mere dismissal of the existence of God wouldn't do the trick, got together and formed a set of ideals that hopefully would satiate their need for a reasonable theory of our existence. This group of 34 people wrote what is known as the "Humanist Manifesto I." John Dewey, the father of modern progressive education, was one of the 34.

This document is the foundation of secular humanism, which is what is practiced in our society today. Secular humanism denies the existence of a supreme being, supports evolution, rejects absolutes, makes us gods and believes in the innate goodness of man.

Forty years later, the "Humanist Manifesto II" was written and further explains the ideology on which our society is based.

Since 1963, when the U.S. Supreme Court banned prayer from schools, secular humanists successfully have continued to promote the idea that separation of church and state means freedom from religion, not freedom of religion.

Ironically, secular humanism wants religion out of the schools, when it is a religion itself.

The "Humanist Manifesto I" states that humanism is a religion nine times. To further support this claim, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1961 that humanism is a religion as well. So now, most of the public is led to believe that religion has been removed from schools, when in reality, God has been removed from schools and an atheistic philosophy has been implemented.

Thankfully, there have been some historical figures who have stood up for truth along the way.

Abraham Lincoln, one of the bravest and most respected presidents because of his stand against slavery, was a Christian, and he didn't hide it. In almost every significant speech he gave, he made it clear God was his foundation.

He stated in his first inaugural address, in 1861, "Intelligence, patriotism, Christianity and a firm reliance on him who has never yet forsaken this favored land are still competent to adjust in the best way all our present difficulty."

The Emancipation Proclamation, given by Lincoln in 1863, which declares that all slaves are free, states, "And upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice, warranted by the Constitution upon military necessity, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God."

Ben Franklin states in his autobiography, "And now I speak of thanking God, I desire with all humility to acknowledge that I owe the mentioned happiness of my past life to his kind providence, which led me to the means that I used and gave them success."

Today, man is so smart he is confused and has lost his grasp on what truth really is.

We think science has the answers, and what it can't explain, we write off with some mindless theory such as the Big Bang.

You can do all the research and pondering that you want, but the truth of God's creation is right in front of your eyes. Believing in God is not a blind faith. Stop for a second and look at how incredibly complex and beautiful our world is. Evidence of God's existence is everywhere.

We spend so much time educating ourselves, but theories and textbooks are blurring our sense of reality. Maybe we would be better off with the rustic surroundings that the pilgrims had.

Things were much simpler back then, back when we truly could think.

Why is it that people who play chess always think they're better than people who play checkers?

Is it possible to tip a cow?

I remember the Collegian promising to issue a women's NCAA Tournament bracket, but then it never delivered. I guess that's because Title IX didn't force them to.

FYI for Katie Sutton: professors don't have teaching degrees unless they're teaching their students how to teach.

I was hoping Scott Roney would finally write a non-Christian column. But, once again, it's the same old crap.

Additional Union renovations set to be completed by end of June

By COURTNEY DUFFIELD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Coffee/Sweet Shop, computer store and Multicultural Office will complete most of the K-State Student Union's renovation, said Mike Mayo, project architect at The Ken Ebert Design Group.

The renovations are almost complete and students already are able to enjoy the visual changes, Mayo said.

Throughout the project there have been small problems with the renovation, but Mayo said these problems have been minimal and will not keep the work from being completed on schedule. He said the contractor was running on schedule and might even complete the project early.

Cindie Snyder, Union marketing and promotions manager, said the Coffee/Sweet Shop will be 1,320 square feet once completed. It will sell Starbucks coffee and freshly baked pastries, bagels and other desserts. The shop will be open from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m.

"I think it could be great," Kim Hoglund, sophomore in French, said. "The coffee shop will give students another place to hang out."

The computer store will be located in the east part of the Union, near the location of the previous copy center, Snyder said. It will sell electronic supplies such as calculators and computers.

The Multicultural Office will have at least four multicultural groups: the Asian American Student Union, the Black Student Union, the Hispanic American Leadership Organization and the Native American Student Body.

Snyder said the Coffee/Sweet Shop, computer store and Multicultural Office should be completed sometime between the end of May and June.

"About 2 1/2 years ago it was scheduled to be done in May and it looks like it will," Snyder said.

Colonel to plead guilty to ignoring wife's felony

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — An Army colonel commanding the military's anti-drug operation in Colombia knew his wife — who has admitted dealing drugs — was involved in money laundering but failed to turn her in, prosecutors revealed Monday.

In a letter to a judge, prosecutors said James Hiett, 48, agreed to plead guilty to ignoring a felony committed by his wife, Laurie.

The charge carries up to three years in prison.

It was the first time the colonel was at all connected to the scandal, but prosecutors refused to detail the case against him.

His attorney, Abraham Clott, did not return a phone call.

Laurie Hiett, 36, pleaded guilty to drug conspiracy charges in January, saying she shipped packages containing $700,000 worth of drugs to New York City. She also admitted traveling to New York to collect the proceeds to take back to Colombia — an act falling under the definition of money laundering.

At the time, Laurie Hiett told reporters she purposely kept her husband in the dark.

"At one point, he may have asked me why I was going to New York," she said. "I just told him, 'Don't ask me.'"

An investigation by the Army Criminal Investigation Division in Panama has cleared Hiett, saying he had no knowledge of his wife's crimes.

Prosecutors in Brooklyn, however, had insisted their investigation was not over.

Judge rules Microsoft violated antitrust laws

By EUN-KYUNG KIM
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Humbling a proud giant of the computer age, a federal judge ruled Monday that Microsoft Corp. violated U.S. antitrust laws by keeping "an oppressive thumb" on competitors during the race to link Americans to the Internet.

In a sweeping verdict against the empire that Bill Gates built, U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson said Microsoft violated the Sherman Antitrust Act, just as Standard Oil and AT&T did in earlier antitrust cases.

He concluded that the company was guilty — as the federal government, 19 states and the District of Columbia had alleged in the case that began in October 1998 — of "unlawfully tying its Web browser" to its Windows operating system that dominates the computer market worldwide.

"Microsoft placed an oppressive thumb on the scale of competitive fortune, thereby effectively guaranteeing its continued dominance" in the market, Jackson wrote.

The verdict affirms Jackson's previous ruling in November that the software giant is a monopoly, one that illegally used its power to bully competitors, stifle innovation and hurt consumers in the process.

The judge's ruling can be appealed, delaying its effect for years, and Gates said the company would pursue that avenue.

While Microsoft "did everything we could to settle this case, we believe we have a strong case on appeal," Gates said. "This ruling turns on its head the reality that consumers know: that our software has helped make PCs accessible and more affordable to millions of Americans."

The decision opens the door for the federal government to seek drastic penalties against Microsoft.

The options range from breaking up the company that made Gates a billionaire to forcing it to share its proprietary software code with competitors. Jackson also paved the way for states to seek penalties under their own anticompetition laws.

"Microsoft maintained its monopoly power by anticompetitive means and attempted to monopolize the Web browser market," the judge wrote in a ruling that caused a record-plunge in the Nasdaq market even before its release. Microsoft stock dropped by more than $15 a share to close at $90.87 1/2, costing Gates about $12.1 billion in paper losses.

The Justice Department vowed to press the case until consumers are rewarded.

"Microsoft has been held accountable for its illegal conduct by a court of law," Attorney General Janet Reno said. "Thanks to this ruling, consumers who have been harmed can now look forward to benefits."

Reno's antitrust chief, Joel Klein, said he was still open to a settlement but that it would have to redress the violations cited in Monday's ruling.

"Microsoft's anticompetitive actions trampled the competitive process through which the computer software industry generally stimulates innovation and conduces to the optimum benefit of consumers," Jackson wrote.

The allegations stem from a lawsuit filed by the Justice Department and 19 states and the District of Columbia against the company based in Redmond, Wash.

Jackson wrote that Microsoft made arrangements with computer manufacturers and Internet providers that "successfully ostracized" Navigator, a browser made by Microsoft rival Netscape Communications, in favor of the company's Internet Explorer.

Microsoft adopted aggressive measures to ensure that access providers would encourage the use of Explorer over Navigator, Jackson wrote, adding, "There are no valid reasons to justify the full extent of Microsoft's exclusionary behavior."

Heroes exist in athletes

■ Parents not sole examples for children with disabilities.

Some people say that sports figures shouldn't be our children's heroes rather, the parents should be our children's heroes instead.

I ask those who feel that way to defend their beliefs to those children who have physical disabilities and can't shoot, pass or let alone even walk like you and me.

This past week I lost a close friend of mine

VIEWPOINT

JOSHUA KINDER

to muscular dystrophy, a friend who also was the biggest Derrick Thomas fan on the planet.

Though I never asked him why Thomas was his hero, I felt as if I already knew. Jason lived for Chiefs games, and when I watched him witness a Thomas sack, that was when everything seemed so crystal clear to me.

Jason lived his dreams through Thomas. Every time Thomas, who himself was confined to a wheelchair in the last weeks of his life, made a beeline for a quarterback, it was as if Jason was on the field at the same time and was engulfed in the very same play.

Though Jason couldn't run and sack quarterbacks, he did through the play of his hero.

Sure, parents should be idolized more, and I truly believe Jason looked at his parents as heroes. But in his case, Thomas was larger than life, and gave Jason the same chills that my heroes gave me as a child when I had aspirations of someday being a professional athlete.

Only, for Jason, those same childhood dreams became much different than mine. Mine were to someday be on the same court as Michael Jordan, no matter how impossible that would have been considering my two left feet. For Jason, the dreams were much deeper and meaningful.

He simply wished he could walk and run like Thomas and use the same gifts God gave Thomas many, many years ago.

Jason matched Thomas' strength in his last days. For Jason and others like him, Thomas and other athletes sometimes are the closest thing certain individuals have to living out their dreams.

Charles Barkley once said he was not a role model. Other athletes who feel that way need to get off of their high horse, and come back to reality and think about who they looked up to when they dreamed of being like someone else.

Children don't just dream of making it to the same level or pinnacle that stars achieved in their careers. They dream of being able to run and walk like you did. That's the most important part, and the part the critics of sports heroes love to take for granted.

See, sports heroes can mean so much more to children than just simply dreaming of someday doing the same thing they do. Until Saturday, when I helped lay Jason to his rest, I wasn't sure if I knew what that deeper meaning was. That's when I realized that everything I do, even the simplest things in life, I take for granted.

I ask the people who say sports figures should not be our children's heroes how many times you've walked through the city parks, chased a dog, brushed your teeth or even dressed yourself, and thought about the thousands of individuals out there that only dream of doing those everyday tasks they do, let alone perform the same way Thomas did for so many years on the football field.

If you haven't thought about those things, try to do so before you say too much emphasis is being placed on athletes, because I sure wouldn't want to tell other children who are disabled that a certain sports figure can't be their hero.

Women's crew sweeps Tulsa, wins 3 of 6 in Iowa/Tennessee Tri-Dual

Following the team's March 26 sweep of Tulsa, the K-State women's rowing squad won three of six races last weekend at the Iowa/Tennessee Tri-Dual in Iowa City, Iowa.

Lake McBride was the site was of this year's event, which featured varsity and novice boats from the University of Iowa, the University of Tennessee and K-State.

The round-robin format paired the Wildcats with the Volunteers in the morning session of the competition.

In K-State's First Varsity 8 race, Tennessee edged the Cats by nine-tenths of a second with a time of 7:21.1.

However, the remaining two K-State boats both found victory against the Volunteers.

The Cats' Second Varsity 8 (7:33.0) topped its opponent by more than three seconds, while the First Novice 8 boat (7:40.5) defeated Tennessee by nearly 17 seconds.

After K-State finished competing with the Volunteers, the afternoon session pitted the Cats against Iowa.

K-State's First Novice 8 squad completed its sweep of Saturday's competition, downing both Hawkeye boats with a time of 7:34.6. The Cats' finish was more than a full second faster than Iowa's "A" boat, and bettered the Hawkeyes' "B" squad by more than half a minute.

"We are undefeated as far as the novice crews are concerned, and we are very excited about that," assistant coach Kevin Harris said. "They have learned a lot in the last couple races."

"Most impressive is they have learned to race. This was the cleanest they have raced all year."

Meanwhile, K-State didn't fare as well against Iowa's other two boats.

The Cats' First Varsity 8 fell to the Hawkeyes by nearly 20 seconds, finishing with a mark of 7:30.3 compared to Iowa's time of 7:10.9.

"We raced well in the first 1,000 meters," head coach Jenny Hale said. "In the second half of the races, we allowed Iowa to pull away, and they opened up a large margin on us."

Then, in the Second Varsity 8 competition, the Hawkeyes' boat posted a faster time than Iowa's First Varsity 8. The second team turned in a 7:05.5 to wallop K-State by more than 30 seconds.

Yet, Hale said it was a productive day for the rowing squad.

"I think both the varsity and novice boats took some very good strokes (Saturday)," Hale said. "The challenge for us is to race our race and not be intimidated by a great squad like Iowa."

Up next, the Cats return to the water Saturday and Sunday in Davis, Calif., to face Cal-Davis, Sacramento State and Stanford in a four-team meet.

"We have some things to work on, but I feel we have made some progress going into the race in California next weekend," Hale said. "It is always nice to get a win, but it is also rewarding when your team is able to improve and walk away with positives."

Mortimer, Hinds lead team to overall title at competition

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's track team ran away with the overall team title at the Florida State USTCA Collegiate Series in Tallahassee on Saturday afternoon.

More specifically, the team's middle distance and distance runners raced the team to victory, led by All-Americans Amy Mortimer and Korene Hinds.

Mortimer finished first in the 1,500 meters with an NCAA provisional qualifying time of 4:22.66, followed closely by second-place Hinds. Hinds, in turn, won the 800 meters with a time of 2:08.5, narrowly defeating runner-up Mortimer.

Wrapping up the distance domination, junior Annie Wetterhus won the 3,000 meters with a mark of 9:58.32.

K-State head coach Cliff Rovelto said his superior talent overall of the team's distance and middle distance runners helps each athlete individually, in addition to adding points to team scores.

"The good thing about being around good athletes is that it raises the perception of what is good, of what is personally acceptable," Rovelto said. "You could take one of the girls and have her work out by herself, and she wouldn't improve as well."

The speed at which the runners have improved is somewhat surprising considering that this is Mortimer and Hinds' first year at K-State, Rovelto said. However, both had success previously, Mortimer at Riley County High School and Hinds at Essex Community College.

"They're both very, very talented," Rovelto said. "I felt after what Amy did last spring and summer that she was arguably the best girl in the country coming out of high school. And Korene, coming out of community college, was the best in the community-college ranks. By far, not even close."

Now, the two are pushing each other in practice and in competition. However, despite the fact that two of the nation's premier runners are on the same team, they don't feel any rivalry toward each other, Mortimer said.

"During workouts, we want to beat each other, and we talk about it," Mortimer said. "It's good that we can talk about it. We know it's natural to be competitive."

The two runners help each other, because their training prepares them for distances from 800 meters to 5,000 meters. Each runner's strengths can push the rest of the team, Hinds said.

"She's better at endurance," Hinds said about Mortimer. "She helps me in endurance, and I help her in sprints."

The ability to run more than one race also gives all the distance runners a certain amount of variety, Rovelto said.

"It's not like week in, week out they're butting heads," Rovelto said. "It's an advantage if you have middle distance runners that you can move up or down and distance runners that you can run in the shorter races. You don't get that staleness psychologically of running the same race or running against the same people."

Stressing a variety of distances in training has paid off for the two runners. Hinds, the 800-meter winner at Florida, placed second in the 3,000 meters at the Stanford meet a week ago with an NCAA automatic qualifying time of 9:11.82. As a result, the distance runners are being pushed by a middle distance runner, Rovelto said.

"They're training and/or racing against someone who is the best," Rovelto said.

KSU track team competes in Florida State track meet

It was a good weekend for the K-State track and field team at the Florida State USTCA Collegiate Series Outdoor track and field meet.

"I thought it was a good effort on both sides," K-State track and field coach Cliff Rovelto said. "The women did particularly strong on the track and did well to win the meet, while the men had a strong third place finish."

With a total of 196 points, the women's team defeated second place Florida State by six points, and South Florida with 169 points. The women's team won four of its seven events on the track with strong performances from NCAA All-Americans Amy Mortimer, who finished first in the 1,500 meters with a time of 4:22.66 and finished second in the 800 meters with a time of 2:09.67.

Korene Hinds finished first in the 800 meters with a time of 2:08.5 and second in the 1,500 meters with a time of 4:24.60.

The team received strong performances in other events as well. In the field, Terresha DeRossett won the high jump, tying her career high of 5 feet, 10 inches, while NCAA All-American Erin Anderson finished second in the high jump at 5 feet, 6 inches and second in the pole vault at 12 feet.

On the men's side, K-State won four individual events. Sprinters Terence Newman and Jason Green each competed well in the 100 and 200 meters.

Newman won the 100 meters with a time of 10.66, while Green finished second with a time of 10.76. In the 200 meters, Newman finished second with a time of 21.34, and Green finished third with a time of 21.61.

"Terence had another solid day in both events," Rovelto said. "Jason Green really looked good as well."

Tamel Sisney turned in a strong performance in the field with a winning throw of 56 feet 6 and 1/2 inches in the shot and finished second in the discus and hammer.

Next action for the Cats is at the Texas Relays Wednesday through Saturday.

Stretching 1st step to fitness

STORY BY TARYN FORT ■ PHOTOS BY KELLY GLASSCOCK

Swimsuit season is creeping up on the horizon. Now is the time when many people begin exercising and preparing for the summer months.

A complete exercise program must include stretching to be effective, said Melissa Blaski, fitness consultant at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"Stretching is one step of an exercise program that is frequently forgotten, but it is extremely important," Blaski said. "Stretching before and after exercise would be the ideal combination for a workout program, but if one chooses to only stretch once, I would recommend stretching after exercising."

Lori Strack, graduate student in wellness, said the effectiveness of stretching is important to health as well as body structure.

"Stretching increases the range of motion within your muscles and keeps them from shortening," she said. "With any running or aerobic activity, stretching will improve the quality of a workout. It also helps decrease soreness after lifting weights."

Stretching is especially effective on older people but is necessary for the college-age person who works out on a regular basis.

"I stretch almost every time after I work out," Kerri Gepner, senior in psychology, said. "It makes me feel so much more flexible, and I am not as stiff as I feel sometimes when I do not stretch. I know that it prevents the tearing of muscles and is just the more healthy way to work out."

"With any running or aerobic activity, stretching will improve the quality of a workout. It also helps decrease soreness after lifting weights."

Lori Strack, graduate student in wellness

Jeff Nesselhof, senior in marketing, takes time to stretch his legs and warm up before the K-State soccer club practice on Monday afternoon. Stretching is an important part of any workout.

Stretching is a necessary element of exercise, but it does not actually tone any areas of the body that eventually will lead to weight loss.

"To tone the body, one needs to be lifting weights and doing cardiovascular exercise," Blaski said. "To lose weight, one needs to combine exercise with healthy eating. Stretching is just to prepare, cool down and keep muscles lengthened. It will not lead to direct weight loss."

Healthy eating habits are a must when trying to lose weight, Strack said. "Try to avoid eating out as much and make your meals at home," she said. "Be careful with salads and what you put on them, and stay away from fried foods. Packing something at home will save you the urge to get fast food."

Strack said finding the time to work out on a regular basis might not be ideal for everyone, but some simple lifestyle changes can lead to a person feeling a bit more healthy.

"There are easy ways to become more active within everyday life and for someone who does not have the time to get to the recreation center everyday," she said. "You can park further away in any parking lot. Biking to class rather than driving is quicker than walking, yet you still get a workout. Taking the stairs instead of the elevator is another way to incorporate simple exercise."

Health QUESTION

By: Carol Kennedy

Director of health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center

Q: Can snoring cause health problems?

A: Snoring is caused by vibrations in the mouth that result in harsh or hoarse sounds. In most cases, there is no known reason for snoring to occur.

However, too much alcohol or sedation at bedtime, chronic nasal congestion, enlarged adenoids or tonsils and sleep apnea can precipitate snoring.

People generally are not aware that they snore. Snoring is commonly identified by partners or roommates and is usually not a sign of a health problem. However, rarely, it can be an indication of a breathing disorder called sleep apnea. Partners can identify the possibility of this disorder by identifying times greater than 10 seconds without breathing (absence of snoring). See your doctor if you suspect that you have periods without breathing while sleeping.

Stress, lack of sleep cause health concerns

By: CHELSEA SCHMIDT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Thoughts of final exams looming and projects are piling up for the last month and a half of school, students tend to find themselves stressed out.

With stress levels about to increase, health concerns become an issue, said Art Rathbun, counselor and biofeedback specialist for University Counseling Services at Lafene Health Center.

"Probably for students coming near finals, the sleep pattern will be the most affected," Rathbun said. "This is a period where students will pull all-nighters and study at unusual hours."

Lack of sleep and added stressors during this time period can have negative effects on functioning, he said.

"It has a debilitating affect on energy resources and makes them open for viruses and other things," Rathbun said.

The students who will be most affected are those who already have illnesses associated with long-term stress, he said. Some examples include migraines, muscle-contracting headaches and irritable bowel syndrome.

"You will tend to have more problems during and right after finals week," Rathbun said. "If you are already prone to muscle-contracting headaches, you will experience more of those, and if you have irritable bowel syndrome, you may have more problems."

However, for those not suffering from long-term stress ailments, Rathbun said there are numerous ways of avoiding stress-related problems.

"The best thing students can do, since we still have five weeks before finals, is to plan out their time carefully and not put things off," Rathbun said. "It's more of a preventative kind of thing."

When experiencing the stressors of finals week, Rathbun said he encourages students to engage in stress-relieving activities.

"Usually, finals week occurs when the weather is nice," he said. "Take a 10-minute walk and do some deep breathing several times during the day. Or, if you are studying on campus, it's good to take some time to walk around the library in the long corridors."

One of the most important things, Rathbun said, is to take breaks.

"If you don't take breaks, your study efficiency will go down and you will be putting in the time studying and not getting the most out of it," he said.

However, he said these breaks should be short, usually about 20 minutes, and should involve some sort of energizing.

"Don't go lay in bed or overeat," he said. "Do something that will energize you like run or walk. Stretching exercises and breathing exercises are also effective."

"Don't watch TV, because you may get interested and not want to stop."

Even though Rathbun said he encourages students to plan ahead, there still are those who are concentrating on present assignments and not considering finals week until the necessary time arrives.

Monica Jury, senior in interior design, said she is concentrating on current assignments and will worry about finals when the dates draw nearer.

"I've got a project to finish that was due before spring break," she said. "I had a test two days after we got back from spring break, and I have to relearn myself a new computer program. My finals are all on Friday of finals week, so I'll think about them the Thursday before."

Jean Barnett, junior in theater, said he will take a similar approach and not worry or stress out until just before the exams.

"Finals are five weeks away. I'll worry about them one week before," he said. "I'm a master procrastinator."

posed by student government and has been in review by the parking council, development council and student government.

"We think that the direction we are going to go is with the shuttle system, but we have no definite plans yet," Abbott said.

Heinrich said the project as a whole is being looked at by K-State and Manhattan.

"The university and the city are both analyzing the situation," Heinrich said. "We think this is the way to do it."

Heinrich said students have varying opinions on the issue of the parking permit price increase and the shuttle system as a whole.

"There are many people who are for it and understand the logic behind it," Heinrich said. "But there are always those people who don't want to have to pay anything for it or just don't want the shuttle system."

Carlene Nickel, sophomore in business, said she is impartial about the parking-permit increase because she lives close to campus, but she thinks the shuttle-bus idea is a good one.

"I don't know how I would feel about having to pay so much more for a parking permit," Nickel said. "But I think the shuttle buses will be a good thing for K-State."

Abbott said the shuttle system looks like something that will be coming in the near future and must be paid for in some way.

"Of course, there is a lot of work to do when deciding how to pay for the system," Abbott said. "But we have done ridership surveys and talked with the city about how we are going to go about it, and we feel we have taken a logical dates have been provided by the visiting group, with additional questions added by commissioners, Klinek said.

Snead said these questions address key aspects and issues that affect Manhattan.

"It's a difficult job because of the wide range of responsibilities and issues that can happen at any time," Snead said. "The candidate must be skilled in broad public management issues in another community."

Manhattan's status as a college town was one of the criterion used to prune the list of applications.

"Experience as a city manager in a university community was a major issue," Snead said.

The Par Group will be involved in the interviewing process until a new city manager's contract can be drawn up, Snead said.

highlight of Heinrich's term.

"For 30 years, the university has been talking about parking," he said. "I really think that if he hadn't brought that up, we'd still be where we were last year and that's with nothing."

Increasing Internet benefits was one of Heinrich and Eckert's platform goals, and they accomplished this through the implementation of online voting.

"Online voting was something that was very successful," Heinrich said.

He said the Student Governing Association hoped online voting would increase off-campus and non-greek voters, and it did that.

"Actually, that was a majority of the people who voted," Heinrich said.

Another one of Heinrich and Eckert's platform goals was restructuring finals week. Heinrich said they researched this issue and sent out surveys to student organizations and e-mailed surveys over the Office of Student Activities and Services mailing list.

They received 543 responses with 51 percent favoring a split finals week and 49 percent not in favor.

Heinrich said that it will be up to Worcester and Vice President Elect Dana Pracht to decide what to do next. However, Heinrich said Provost James Coffman has ensured the importance of dead week and plans to write a letter to professors about the importance of dead week.

The only platform issue that wasn't completely accomplished was expanding the residence hall meal plan to include the K-State Student Union.

Eckert said a considerable amount of progress was made in the area.

Heinrich and Eckert wanted to implement a plan that would allow students to eat at the Union and use their residence hall meal plans. However, what's being implemented is a debit-card meal plan where students can put money on their K-State ID cards and use it in the Union.

"Next year in the mailing that goes out to all new students there should be information provided about the debit card meal plan," Eckert said. "It will give students another option to choose from when they look at meal plans for the year."

Eckert said that if students don't want to get a 15-meal plan because they don't think they will be at the residence hall enough to use up the 15 meals a week, they can drop down to a 10-meal plan and use their ID card to pay for the rest of their meals at the Union.

"This was an issue that was not greatly publicized throughout our term, but it was an issue that we feel very positive that we're taking steps in the right direction," Eckert said. "Additionally, we proposed that the Association of Residence Halls continue to research this to find a suitable long-term plan."

After a year in office and working to accomplish their goals, Heinrich said he learned there are two important concepts to getting things accomplished while in office: learning the process and building relationships with the right people, and taking ideas through the right people whether it be faculty, administrators or students.

Working with all those people to find the best solution to a problem is sometimes difficult, Heinrich said.

"Trying to find that perfect compromise is probably the hardest part of the job," he said.

Another hard part of being student body president is finding enough time to do every thing, Heinrich said. He said he spent about 40-50 hours a week going to meetings, speaking to groups, writing letters, answering e-mails, traveling and doing office work.

"The time just flies," he said. "If you have real issues and things that really matter it takes a long time get them done."

"About the time you learn the process, it's about over."

Eckert said the most rewarding part of being vice president was the aspect of serving and providing students with someone they could talk to and someone who would listen.

"It's definitely been an extremely rewarding experience to have that ability to work with so many people across campus, and I would definitely do it again if I had the opportunity," he said.

Worcester said he thought that Heinrich and Eckert did a good job as student body president and vice president.

"What they did best overall was really listening and looking at issues that were important to students that came up during the year," he said. "They didn't just focus on issues in their campaign."

"That's what really impressed me about them."

we used five years ago and on input from commissioners," Snead said.

This past profile was the same used to hire former city manager Gary Greer, who resigned from the position in December. Greer's former assistant, Ron Fehr, is serving as temporary manager until the position can be filled.

The names of these five remaining applicants cannot be released to the public until after final interviews have been completed, Klinek said.

"At this time, we're not going to release names because of the confidentiality of candidates," he said. "We've issued invitations to five candidates for interviews April 15-16."

a.m. The Lafene Health Center privilege fee was being debated.

Petrik said he thought the debate was good for Senate.

"Ultimately, what everyone in Senate wanted to see there was for Lafene to get an increase," he said. "We knew that Lafene is a great resource on campus, and without an increase, Lafene would have to had cut their services, or they would have been out of business."

Petrik said the legislation probably was the most controversial Senate had seen all year.

"The bill failed twice before it finally passed," he said. "People don't remember that ever happening before."

As for issues like tuition increase, Petrik said Senate has no control over what the Board of Regents decides to do with tuition. The most it can do is adopt resolutions stating its opinion, and the student body president, Senate chair and Governmental Relations Committee chair go to Topeka and lobby for K-State.

Senate vice chair Mary Bosco also commented on the great work of the committees.

"All of our committees did a good job of taking care of their own particular duties and carrying them out," she said. "For the first time we didn't have an ineffective committee."

Bosco cited great leadership as the motivation behind successful committees.

"It just seemed liked every person in each committee actually did something instead of just the committee head," she said.

Looking back on the 1999-2000 Student Senate, Worcester said there are some things he wished would have gone differently, but he said that's always the case.

"While personally I may not have agreed with every decision, there was no doubt in my mind that the senators were voting on what was best for the university," he said.

Worcester said students won't immediately feel the effect of many of the decisions that were made.

"We did a good job of looking at the big picture to see how we could improve student life on campus," he said. "Not just for us, but also for the future."

Concert to support CD for local bands

By RAEGAN TONEY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Local music and an upcoming compact disc will be promoted tonight at a concert at Silverado Saloon.

"We're trying to increase the awareness of some really good bands here in Manhattan," Dave Studnicka, senior in geography, said.

Studnicka, along with Jeff Bilberry, senior in advertising, have a local music show that airs from 7 to 8 p.m. Tuesday nights on KSDB-FM 91.9. It was through this show that they got the idea to produce a local music CD.

"We started this idea last semester," Bilberry said. "We didn't get permission for the bands to come on the air, but we did get permission this semester."

Each week, Studnicka and Bilberry have a different local band play on the air at the Wildcat 91.9. It's these studio cuts of bands such as Sharkey's Little Groove Box, Phat Albert, Fly Box and several others that will be on the CD. Studnicka said they are going to put a couple of bonus live tracks on as well.

"We want to put Manhattan on the map," Bilberry said. "We have a little exploding scene here. Ultimate Fakebook just signed to the same label as Jennifer Lopez and G Love and Special Sauce. Ruskabank, who has a CD coming out next month, and Podstar have also signed to a label."

Studnicka and Bilberry have organized a concert tonight to help raise money for production of the CD. Fly Box, Sharkey's Little Groove Box and Phat Albert will be performing. The doors open at 9 p.m. with a $5 cover charge for the 18-and-older show. Proceeds will go to the production of the CD.

"I think that Silverado's is the premier concert place, and we're trying to prove this to them," Bilberry said. "Eventually, we want to try to reserve a night each month at Silverado's for the local music show."

Both Studnicka and Bilberry said they want to see more involvement in the local music scene and would like to see more places in Aggieville having local music shows.

"We have another show on May 2 that O'Phil and Ruskabank and hopefully some other bands will be playing at," Studnicka said. "If this show is a success, we know that the next one will be a success too, and hopefully more places will start having more local shows because of the success of these shows."

With the combination of the CD and the two shows, Studnicka and Bilberry said they hope to raise awareness of the local bands that are just getting started, while helping the bands that have been around for a little longer.

"I think this CD sounds like a great idea," said Jennifer Beard, sophomore in anthropology and pre-nursing. "It's been a while since local music has really been promoted in Manhattan, and I'd love to see it come back and see the local bands start to really support it again."

The CD is scheduled to be released in the fall. Studnicka and Bilberry said they want to be able to sell it for a couple of dollars or give it away.

"We're trying to do something cheap, but really good quality," Studnicka said. "Give them away and get the word out that there is really good music here in Manhattan. If we can get these CDs out and just two people pick them up and start spreading the word about the great local music scene here in Manhattan, then we've done what we've set out to do."

DEER IN THE TWILIGHT

White-tailed deer graze in an open field near Tuttle Creek State Park. The white-tailed deer prefer to live near forests and agricultural areas, such as crop fields, because these areas provide food and cover. Deer are able to run up to 40 miles per hour, jump as high as 9 feet and swim 13 miles per hour.

Accidents send 2 to hospital, cause 1 fatality Tuesday

By JAMIE BARRETT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Seven accidents near Wamego were reported Tuesday including one resulting in a fatality.

Two men also were sent to the hospital following a collision south of Wamego on Kansas Highway 99.

A Jevic freightliner semi-trailer driven by David Miller of North Wilkesboro, N.C., was struck by a gravel truck owned by Prockish Trucking in Wamego and driven by Gary Dorr of St. George, Kan., at about 11:53 a.m. Tuesday.

Sheriff T.I. McCool of the Kansas Highway Patrol said the accident happened when the semi tried to back into a driveway to make a delivery.

"The driver of the Jevic had stopped to try and back up into a driveway when the gravel truck came over the hill and could not stop in time," McCool said.

McCool said both men were taken to Wamego City Hospital, and later Dorr was taken to Manhattan's Mercy Health Center on College Avenue, but neither were seriously injured.

"The driver of the Jevic was already back out here to look at the scene, but the other driver had to be taken to Manhattan," McCool said.

Another accident in the Wamego area near the Vermillion Bridge on U.S. Highway 24 resulted in a fatality.

Deron Bradley, Berryton, Kan., was driving westbound when he during much of the day.

"We have been flagging traffic all day long," Jackson said.

The roads surrounding the accident on Highway 99 had to be closed all day because of gravel from the accident covering the road.

Leroy Jackson, area superintendent for the Kansas Department of Transportation, said KDOT usually does not get involved in the aftermath of accidents.

"We usually don't have to come out to accidents, but in this case the road has been closed almost all day," Jackson said.

Connie Miller, who lives near to Highway 99, said the semi was making a delivery to her home when the accident happened, but she did not see the actual collision.

"I was turned around when it happened," Miller said. "The gravel truck hit it broadside, so it was a miracle neither of them were killed," Miller said.

Take Back the Night march, rally to support safer environment for women

Recognition of the rage of women who have been violated will be the focus of Friday's Take Back the Night rally and march, Ordinary Women member Michele Janette said.

The march, sponsored by Ordinary Women, will begin at 6:30 p.m. OW is a feminist group on campus that is committed to the creation of a feminist community and doing whatever needs to be done to make K-State and Manhattan a safe place for women, Janette, assistant professor of English, said.

"We want to create a world in which a safe time and safety are not denied to women because they are women," Janette said. "The rally is a chance to envision such a world and demand it to come into existence."

The march will begin at the southeast entrance of Hale Library, continue to Blumont Hall, go through Aggieville and end up at Triangle Park. It is a march to abolish violence against women, said Kristin McGlinn, OW member and senior in psychology.

"We are helping in the fight to end violence against women by taking back what rightfully belongs to us — to take back the streets," McGlinn said.

The march will end at Triangle Park with another rally and a performance by Lushbox, a local band dedicated to women's issues.

OW members chose for the march to end in Triangle Park specifically for the statement it makes, Janette said.

"The march is about what happens on campus and in town, and the park is right at the intersection," she said.

Janette said men will not be allowed to walk in the march.

"Rape is talked about as a women's problem, but it is a man's problem," she said.

Men will be allowed at the rallies before and after the march and are encouraged to cheer for the women as they walk, Janette said.

The reason men cannot walk in the march is to make the women participating as comfortable as possible, Sara Nettleingham, junior in English, said.

"For a woman who is a recent victim of violence, walking next to a man may make her uncomfortable," Nettleingham said.

McGlinn said this is a time for women.

"I know it sounds sexist, but it's not asking too much for the women of K-State to take 45 minutes to themselves and bond together," McGlinn said.

The group expects about 500 women to participate in the march and encourages people to come.

"I think there is this image that everyone hates feminism, but it is looking like tons of women want to show they care about women's issues — visibly, publicly and loudly," Janette said. "The women on this campus seem really ready to do this."

"The group plans on the march being a loud and visual statement," Janette said.

"Sometimes marches are focused on honoring the violence that has happened to women," Janette said. "This is about claiming our right to exist. Yelling with lots of women is important to the context of claiming our own power."

Nettleingham said this march is important to K-State because violence against women happens here.

"We cannot count on it to end if we don't take the initiative to say that we won't put up with it anymore," she said.

Clothing display in Union part of awareness project

Pieces of clothing will hang in the K-State Student Union next week to commemorate personal bouts with violence, said Sara Nettleingham, member of Ordinary Women and junior in English.

The Clothesline Project, which will be on display in the Union from 9:45 a.m. to 3 p.m. today through Friday, is sponsored by Ordinary Women, a feminist group on campus. All the articles of clothing will be from domestic violence survivors from the local area.

"It involves women bringing in an article of clothing with whatever they feel they want to express written or painted on it," Nettleingham said. "The articles of clothing can be as anonymous or expressive as they want."

"The OW Clothesline Project is a spinoff of the National Clothesline Project," Melissa Divine, women's studies instructor, said.

"The national project started a number of years ago as a way to increase awareness and personalize the experiences of domestic-violence and sexual-assault survivors," she said. "The shirts are displayed on a clothesline visually recalling that aspect of 'traditional women's work.'"

Kristin McGlinn, OW member and senior in psychology, said the local project is a powerful way for survivors to transfer thoughts and feelings about their experiences onto T-shirts.

"I created an item to hang in the K-State Take Back the Night March in 1998, and I must admit that it was the most therapeutic thing I've done since I was assaulted," McGlinn said. "I hung up a pair of black pants that I was wearing the night of my assault, with the date inscribed on them and a message directed to him."

The Clothesline will be presented at the Take Back the Night March on Friday and will be carried down to Triangle Park, Nettleingham said.

Students given chance to rate classes on site

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is a new site in town, and it's taking a different look at K-State's classes.

Today marks the first day www.AndersonHall.com will be fully operational, including an online survey of K-State classes to give prospective students an idea what they will be in for.

The surveys feature nine questions that ask students who have taken the classes to rate assignments, class size and instructors. Questions include the instructor's interest in teaching and effectiveness, similar to the evaluations departments distribute to students near the end of semesters.

Jeremy Claeys, junior in electronic journalism and political science and one of the site's creators, said the site was founded to provide the surveys for people logging on.

"We wanted to look at new ways to arm students with information when choosing their classes," he said.

Proposals have been made in the past to student government to make the data from instructor evaluations public, Claeys said, but efforts have always stalled. Descriptions in the course catalog don't tell enough, he said.

"That describes the course real well, but it doesn't describe the teacher or the teaching style," he said.

The site, although not affiliated with the university, is named after K-State's administrative building because "K-State" is a registered trademark. The site is designed to take responses and average them for a "grade" for the class in each area, he said.

Not to say that he isn't expecting some objections. Claeys said he has been helped with the site by students and alumni, but many choose to remain anonymous. In other campuses, instructor-rating sites have received negative responses, Claeys said, primarily because they turned into open complaints and insults to instructors.

For www.AndersonHall.com, Claeys said the responses will simply be responses to the questions presented. As far as instructor or administrative objections to that, he said, the gains are too important to ignore.

"We're going to push forward with it because we feel it's something students should have," he said.

Joseph Claeys, Jeremy Claeys' brother and Women's movement exhibit showcased at Hale library

An exhibit featured at the Women's Rights National Historical Park in Seneca Falls in 1998 for the 150th anniversary of the women's movement has landed in Hale Library after appearances at the National Press Club, the Martin Luther King Library, the Gelman Library and college campuses across the country.

"This is Woman's Hour," a display chronicling the achievements of 19th-century American religious leader Mary Baker Eddy, is sponsored by Hale Library Multicultural Services and the K-State Christian Science Organization. The exhibit highlights Eddy's contributions to religion, journalism and women's rights.

Clara Barton, the founder of the American Red Cross, said she regarded Eddy "as the one person, regardless of sex, living today, who has done the greatest good for her fellow creatures" in an interview with the New York American, one century ago.

Recently recognized as one of the "25 most significant religious figures for Americans in the 20th century" by PBS Religion and Ethics Newsweekly, Eddy's accomplishments were achieved in many fields historically dominated by men — as an author, publisher, healer, teacher, public speaker, spiritual discoverer and religious founder, Eddy was a leader when women were expected to be followers.

She launched The Christian Science Monitor, founded the Christian Science Church and wrote Science & Health with Key to the Scriptures, a long-time best-seller. The Women's National Book Association calls "one of 75 books by women whose words have changed the world."

A 1995 inductee into the National Women's Hall of Fame, Eddy was one of the best known female figures for reform at the turn of the century, alongside her contemporaries Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony and Clara Barton.

The exhibit is on view in Hale Library through April 14 in the second-floor commons area.

Michigan man to stand trial for careless storage of gun

FLINT, Mich. — A man accused of carelessly storing the handgun that authorities say a 6-year-old boy used to kill a classmate must stand trial on an involuntary manslaughter charge, a judge ruled Tuesday.

The boy was living with his 22-year-old uncle and defendant Jamelle James, 19, when he found James' gun and took it to Buell Elementary School, prosecutors said. He used it Feb. 29 to fatally shoot first-grade classmate Kayla Rolland, police said.

The boy, who has not been charged, testified in the preliminary hearing Friday that he had seen James playing with the gun, a .32-caliber semiautomatic pistol, and demonstrated how James twirled it in his hands.

The boy said he had seen the gun and some quarters in a shoebox in James' room.

He also said he remembered Kayla being shot, but when asked if he shot her, he shook his head "no," and blamed another boy to whom he said he had given the gun.

"I wasn't playing with the gun, I wasn't," the boy said.

Flint District Judge John L. Conover bound James over for trial at the conclusion of the preliminary hearing Tuesday.

Federal grand jurors last month indicted James, the boy's uncle, Sir Marcus Winfrey, 22; and Robert Lee Morris III, 19, all of nearby Mount Morris Township, on charges that they possessed stolen firearms and unlawfully used marijuana while possessing the weapons.

Disney workers prohibited from sporting moustashes

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Attention Disney workers: Don't throw out those razors just yet.

A week ago, Walt Disney executives said they were relaxing a decades-old policy that prohibited theme-park workers from sporting moustashes on the job.

But the policy has a caveat: You can only grow a mustache on vacation, and not at work.

Walt Disney World spokesman Bill

Warren said there's nothing unusual about the caveat in the policy. "It's a very common corporate guideline that you should grow a mustache on your vacation so you wouldn't have an unkempt appearance."

Campaign finances. Special donation accounts for Hillary Rodham Clinton and Rudolph Giuliani are illegal, two government watchdog groups said in a complaint filed Tuesday with the Federal Election Commission.

Common Cause and Democracy 21 asked the Justice Department's campaign finance task force to investigate.

The complaint targets accounts set up by the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee and the National Republican Senatorial Committee to accept unlimited contributions, known as soft money, from unions, corporations and individuals.

Soft money cannot be spent on advertisements that specifically advocate for a candidate but can be used for general issue ads, as well as get-out-the-vote and other party-building activities. However, it increasingly is being used for issue ads that benefit candidates.

Critics say soft money allows candidates to bypass campaign donation limits.

Speech places in top 10 of nation

By TANNER EHMKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A tradition of excellence has been continued.

More than 300 teams fought to get in the competition. Scarcely more than 100 were accepted. And for the ninth year in a row, the K-State forensics speech team made the cut as one of the top-10 teams in the nation.

The team of 13 returned Tuesday from the national competition in Lincoln, Neb., with a sixth-place trophy after three days of competition against some of the most talented forensics teams in the nation.

"We wanted to be a top-10 team to continue the tradition," said Craig Brown, director of the individual events forensics speech team. "We were competing against the best in the nation."

Brown, a K-State graduate and former member of the team, began coaching the squad in fall 1988. The team has placed in the top 10 at every national tournament since 1992 under Brown's guidance.

"It's not a question of pressure, but a question of pride," Brown said. "The team sees it as a legacy they need to keep alive."

The tournament was more than expected for Christopher McLemore, senior in political science, who brought home three first-place trophies to add to the team's success. McLemore placed first in informative speaking, impromptu speaking and after-dinner speaking.

"There was a lot of pressure, because this was my senior year," McLemore said. "But at the same time, I was confident. It was really more than I had anticipated."

McLemore said the success of the team can be attributed to support from the university and K-State President Jon Wefald. The program is funded without any questions from the university because it has a history of success, he said.

The coaching in the program is also outstanding, McLemore said, adding that Brown is a masterful and experienced coach who works with a terrific coaching staff.

Toban Henry, senior in rhetoric communication, also brought home a first-place trophy in the communication analysis competition. There were more than 130 competitors in his category.

"To be able to make it to the national level is really an accomplishment. To place in the top 10 was really special," Henry said. "K-State has a tradition going. The coaching staff clearly sets the precedence."

In order to be invited to the annual national tournament, an individual must place third or better in at least three different tournaments throughout the year, or place in the top three at the district tournament in Houston, Texas.

The program's ability and success took another step forward in October when the American Forensics Association ranked K-State as the second-best program in the nation. The University of Texas-Austin was ranked first.

"I came to K-State to be on the team," Henry said. "We are consistently one of the best."

However, winning doesn't come easy.

The forensics season begins in September and lasts until early April. The team must combine school with the tough competition the forensics season brings. Throughout the year, the team attends 20 to 25 tournaments throughout the nation, from Lincoln, Neb., to Washington, D.C. The weekends are spent on the road.

When the team members miss their classes for a forensics meet, professors are generally quite supportive, McLemore said. However, some professors are not as accommodating.

"It's difficult to stay on top of things," McLemore said.

Travis Roberts, sophomore in speech communications, also competed in the national tournament and made the quarter-finals in extemporaneous speaking. Roberts, McLemore and Henry are not only teammates but also roommates. The three became acquainted through the speech team.

According to Brown, the three roommates alone would have placed 10th at the tournament with their combined score.

"We would have beaten all but nine of the universities in the nation," McLemore said.

As for next year's team, much talent will be lost to graduation. Only one senior will remain on the team. In the future, the team hopes to consistently rank in the top five.

"There is no expectation of defeat," McLemore said. "The loss of talent will be filled in for."

Despite graduation and not being eligible to compete with the team in the future, both McLemore and Henry plan to help the team in the future while continuing their education.

"I want to pass on my knowledge and use the lessons I've learned and the skills I've gained," McLemore said. "Regardless of where I go, I will take these skills with me."

Interfraternity, Panhellenic councils elect executive members for 2000-2001 school year

By MICHELLE BERTUGLIA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The executive members for the 2000-2001 Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils have been elected and will take their positions Friday.

The new Panhellenic Council executive members were voted in March 27. Katie Scheer, president-elect of Panhellenic Council and junior in biology, said she is excited about her appointment. Scheer said her year as the risk management coordinator helped her learn about the council.

"I am extremely excited to jump in and get going on our goals and upcoming projects," she said. "I am looking forward to getting in there and getting my feet wet."

IFC elections were Monday. Matt Wildman, IFC president-elect and senior in life science, said it is an honor to be the new IFC president. Wildman, executive secretary last year, said he thought it was the most fulfilling role he had ever had.

"It was a wonderful chance to give back to the greek system," Wildman said. "This was a positive experience for me, and I wanted to continue to do more."

Scheer said she has several goals for the Panhellenic Council, including implementing an organization liaison who will sit in on Student Government Association meetings and National Panhellenic Council meetings.

"We got the idea from the KU Panhellenic Council," she said. "They would serve to answer questions at the meeting and bring back ideas to our council."

Other goals Scheer has are to install a faculty liaison who is a faculty member and alumni. The liaison's job would be to advise the council and serve on the judicial board. Scheer also wants to work on the infrastructure of Panhellenic and maintain its proactive stance in the area of risk management, she said.

Scheer said she sees lots of strengths in the upcoming executive council.

"The council members are very strong leaders on campus and in their affiliation," she said. "They have good speaking abilities and work well together. One of our strengths is in having different age groups on the council."

Kellie McClellan, senior in public relations and outgoing Panhellenic president, said she is excited for the new group and hopes the members can come together.

Presidential term of Heinrich, Eckert overall success

The presidential term of Jason Heinrich was an overall success.

However, Heinrich — along with student body vice president Gabe Eckert — encountered problems when they strayed too far from their campaign slogan, "Designed with you in mind."

The tandem was elected under a four-part platform, all four of which at least were addressed during their term, which ended last week.

While they did manage to address these issues, they only were partially successful in achieving them.

In addition to limited success in accomplishing these goals, they also addressed many issues that didn't seem to bear students' interests in mind.

Overall, however, Heinrich and Eckert proved they were capable of cooperating with Student Senate in order to assure their campaign promises were — at the very least — addressed.

Here is a list of the pair's campaign goals, and how they have fared in their pursuit of those goals.

■ The pair said they wanted to restructure finals week to give students a break in the middle of their final exams.

This plan would have given students more time to study and focus, which would allow them to perform better on their exams, in theory.

However, after conducting a survey of more than 500 students during their time in office, mixed support was revealed — 51 percent favored it, 49 percent opposed it.

Although they failed to achieve this goal, they were able to pursue it and stopped only when it was clear they would not have strong student support.

■ The pair said they wanted to expand the uses of the residence hall meal plans to include meals at the K-State Student Union.

This plan did get researched during their term, but was doomed to failure from the get-go. The plan was completely unfeasible and reeked of a hollow campaign promise designed to attract residence hall voters.

■ The pair said they wanted to restructure the reimbursement schedule for dropping classes.

This was a small but important victory for Heinrich and Eckert.

The result simply was to offer students a longer period of time in which to drop classes with a higher refund percentage.

It was not a drastic change from the past, but a significant one that assured students more time to make schedule decisions.

■ The pair said they wanted to expand and improve Internet services provided to students.

This was, perhaps, Heinrich and Eckert's greatest accomplishment.

With the assistance of Elections Chair Travis Morgan — who deserves extraordinary praise himself — they were able to make the switch to online voting this semester. This is a great change that allows off-campus residents easier access to the polls.

Perhaps the pair's biggest failing, however, was their inability to consistently heed student concerns and seek out student opinions.

This was most evident in the smoking resolution proposed to Senate and eventually received by City Commission. This resolution urges the banishment of smoking in Manhattan eating establishments.

The problem with this resolution was that although Heinrich said support for it was heavy, backing was mixed at best. It clearly is beyond the duties of Senate and the student body president to send a letter to the city commission that is, or seems to be, on behalf of the entire K-State student body, at least without gauging public opinion more thoroughly. However, Heinrich's initiative in delving into city issues is worthy of some praise.

Heinrich did an excellent job of continuing the push for an end to the parking problem. He also did a reasonable job of representing students at the Board of Regents and Kansas Legislature.

Overall, Heinrich and Eckert were a strong team. Despite several notable shortcomings, they were able to work with Senate to see many of their plans through to fruition.

They have set a good foundation for incoming Student Body President Jake Worcester and Vice President Dana Pracht to work from and improve on.

Spring's coming provokes action

Every once in a while, between the normal fogs of sleep deprivation and general apathy, I come to a moment of stunning crystal clarity of thought and realization.

One of them was a few minutes ago when I looked at my National Hockey League calendar and saw Paul Kariya instead of Dominik Hasek. Kariya? (pause) What do you mean, it's April?

Why wasn't I notified? I can remember most of the Aprils I've spent here at K-State. I can remember Aprils, but no Mays. April is when you lay your Rube Goldbergian plans for May, and at the stroke of midnight, May 1, that first domino gets pushed and the rest of the semester is just a chain reaction, a direct result of those best-laid plans. April is momentum-building, May is motion-blur.

The end of the school year already is here. We're Wile E. Coyote, and the boulder of inevitability is falling toward our collective skull. It's just that right now, the boulder's shadow still is pretty small.

We need to plan for that home stretch starting right now. Maybe you'll put it off until tomorrow, only to realize your place of work or study is rocked with the festive cries of the beginning of baseball season, and that trying to get work done there is like playing Jenga on a roller coaster.

Enter the first rule of the late-semester rush: kill as few people as possible. I know (better than you do) the roar of the blood lust is hard to ignore, but there's a practical side to restraint in this case.

Even if you can dispose of all incriminating evidence, you'd have to explain why everyone on your residence hall floor has been "studying" for three days. That sort of behavior catches attention and gets people worried. Nobody will buy it.

Also, stock up — on everything. Get pens. Pencils. Paper. Printer ribbons or toner. Aspirin. Coffee. Ramen noodles. Canned pears. Cigarettes (if you can find someplace to smoke 'em anymore). There will be shortages, just when you least expect them.

And even if there's plenty in stores, well, you will hit the breaking point where you just don't have 15 minutes to drive, fight the traffic of no respect, find a place to park and navigate the hell that is MacroMart — and woe unto you if you try to park back on campus. Use the time while there's still some to go around.

The key to survival right now is redundancy, and right now redundancy is the key to survival. Have backup plans for everything.

Where are you going to go if your computer explodes? (If your answer is "the computer labs," give me 15 minutes to stop laughing and try another answer). What if your car doesn't start? What if your futon starts talking to you? (Damn. Don't eat the General Tzo's chicken after it's been out for more than a day). Don't plot out your every move, just have general ideas. Something slightly more specific than "thrash and wail uncontrollably."

(Specific, not necessarily constructive — "thrash and wail" is my fallback for several contingencies).

Break the monotony. Make the long hours worth living. Answer the phone with "Wazzup?" Ask for Dookie. Play Men Without Hats songs as loud as you can; share them with your neighbors. Name your shoes and silverware. Bang the drum all day. Make up new lyrics for "O Fortuna," sing them at passersby, gauge their responses.

Get your sleep. Let nothing stand between you and sleep. A well-rested person with all of their faculties can get more work done in 15 minutes than an exhausted, bleary-eyed zombie can in several hours.

And even if you're pulling the all-nighter and trying to jump-start yourself with elevated caffeine intake, be warned — you stand a better chance of giving yourself cardiac palpitations than doing excellent work.

When you've been awake for 36 hours and drink five cups of coffee, you become both wired and exhausted simultaneously. If you've done it, you know how it feels, and you're nodding quietly and suppressing the shivers. If you haven't, don't. Ever. You'll get more work done, you'll sleep better and 20 years from now your children won't accidentally slip into alternate dimensions every time you use a remote control. Trust me on this if you trust me on nothing else in my life. Best and biggest piece of advice, though — this is April. This is not the end of the world. Don't take it too seriously.

You see, you and I are going to fail — miserably — at something along the way, this month or next month or whenever.

In the aftermath, you can (a) whine, bawl and bemoan your state to anyone within earshot about your personal failure (b) accept it with a stoic growl and let it chew your digestive system to shredded beef or (c) take a lesson from the defeat, apply it to all those challenges still waiting to be fought and won, and laugh.

Yes, laugh. Laugh because it's over, done with, and you tried and you failed and you're still around to give it a chuckle. Laugh because you're alive. Laugh because you can. Laughter is life, life is survival and survival is its own victory. And sometimes, we're going to have to take every win we can get, no matter how small or insignificant.

Once more unto the breach, kids.

Graduate teaching assistants needed for university to remain competitive

In my first semester at K-State, fall 1993, I took my first Spanish class. On the first day of class, our instructor made a few prefatory notes and comments, and then proceeded to make it clear that these were the last words in English that would be spoken in class that semester.

By golly, she wasn't kidding. She spoke (very slow, gesture-laden) Spanish for the remainder of the semester. It took some doing, and I can't speak for my classmates, but in my case, learning occurred.

Because of personal experiences such as this, it disappointed me to read in the March 29 Collegian that K-State's newly elected student body president and vice president would like to take up a campaign issue pushed by one of the pairs that ran against them.

Jake Worcester and Dana Pracht have expressed an interest in doing something about graduate teaching assistants.

If memory serves me correctly, the ticket that pushed this issue wanted to do something more to ensure English speaking proficiency.

First of all, there already are controls on the speaking proficiency of graduate instructors at K-State.

In addition to minimum Test of English as a Foreign Language scores for non-native English speakers who teach, all first-time graduate teachers, whatever their first language, are evaluated by their students on their ability to communicate effectively.

During fall 1997, when I first taught expository writing, my students evaluated my spoken communication, even offering a few suggestions that I've worked on ever since.

Even more importantly, though, I'm not at all convinced that any kind of a GTA problem exists at K-State.

This is my sixth year of study at K-State, and as far as I can tell, superficial complaints about GTAs — especially those whose native language is not English — are nothing new.

During my freshman year, my College Algebra classmates complained about our recitation teacher (a native Hindi speaker).

During my sophomore year, my Physical World classmates complained about our lab teacher (a native Chinese speaker).

Once again, I can't speak for anyone else, but even though both these graduate teachers were not as fluent in English as most of their students, it took only the smallest effort on my part to understand them.

Simply stated, many students are all too ready to erect a wall between themselves and their teachers.

It is much easier to make no effort to learn or to blame one's poor academic performance on someone else.

It becomes that much easier to construct such a wall when a teacher speaks English with an accent, appears close to traditional undergraduate age, happens to be female and/or smallish, has yet to complete a graduate degree — or any combination of these factors.

This is not to say that there are no bad teachers at K-State. I've been here long enough to know of just a few.

However, "bad teacher" hardly is synonymous with "GTA," nor does it mean anything like "non-native English speaker."

In fact, some of the best teaching and learning at K-State goes on in classes taught by GTAs and teachers at every level of the academic hierarchy whose first language is not English.

K-State needs both these types of teachers.

We could hardly call ourselves a university if we required that every instructor's first language be our primary language of instruction.

There are other names for people and institutions that make such exclusions.

As with most other universities of its size, K-State simply could not function without GTAs who, as Katie Sutton noted in Monday's Collegian, often do much more than our name states. K-State's tuition already seems high to many. Imagine the financial slack students would have to pick up to maintain a faculty of terminal degree holders numerous enough to cover all the courses currently taught by GTAs.

Sutton also suggested that one of the reasons GTA teaching merely is "adequate" is that we are subject specialists, rather than holders of education degrees. It seems to me that the same could be said about the majority of K-State's faculty members, which brings up an important point about teaching and learning at the college level.

Universities are places of highly specialized knowledge, where the training ground for imparting that knowledge often is at the front of a classroom. This is how professors become experienced teachers.

Because only some professors and possess education degrees, benefit from strong GTA training programs or actively study teaching throughout their careers, college students must become active learners.

This responsibility seems appropriate at the college level.

The nice thing about GTAs, regardless of our first language, is that we tend to recognize our relative lack of teaching experience as something that legitimately fails to command much respect.

Many of us also compensate by going out of our way to help students achieve and learn.

Of course, the learning end only occurs in those students without walls, who are willing to actively learn.

For some students, that means actually deconstructing the wall they've built and constructing a bridge in its place.

Hence, I propose that all of our new student leaders display true leadership: Lead students to look to themselves first when they see a problem.

Lead students to replace fear with understanding. Lead students to do what they came to college for.

Lead students to learn.

Commission approves airport plan

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan City Commission approved a new 20-year master plan for the Manhattan Regional Airport that outlined roughly $24 million in maintenance and expansion costs Tuesday night.

The plan, unanimously approved by the five-member commission, has two main facets: capital improvements such as maintenance and safety, and expansion, Airport Director Ken Black said.

Roger Austin, director of airport development for consultants Crawford, Murphy, and Til Inc., said the master plan emphasizes pavement improvements, seeking more air services, accommodating charters and possible partnerships with Fort Riley for transport, he said.

Austin said the airport also needs to accommodate larger aircraft. The plan is a necessity for Federal Aviation Administration funding and requires an environmental assessment, he said. For the 20-year plan, the plan estimates a cost of about $18.6 million in federal money and $5.9 million in local funds.

Doug DeMonbrun, project manager for the Random Woods development in the airport area, raised objections that the city airport's plans were getting passed more quickly and easily than private projects. Until he has an idea of the noise in his area, DeMonbrun said he cannot proceed.

"My biggest concern is basically the holding hostage of business and adjacent land owners," he said.

Commissioner Karen McCulloh said residents will need to know that noise will probably increase regardless.

"No matter what kind of studies you do, the more airplanes you have, the more noise there will be," she said.

In other business, the commission approved an allocation of up to $8,700 to Homecare and Hospice Inc. to help 15 individuals left without assistance after the collapse of the similar H.O.M.E. Program. The funds will go toward homemaking services like laundry and minor home repairs for disabled and elderly individuals.

The commission also approved the rezoning of 92.1 acres in the Miller Ranch development from general agricultural district to single-family residential district.

Ackert addition to break ground later this month

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three K-State entities are coming together because of a new addition being planned for this spring.

Gerald Carter, director of facilities planning/university architect, said the ground breaking for the Ackert Hall addition will take place in April. He said the addition, which has been in the planning stages for almost eight years, will move the Department of Biochemistry, the Division of Biology and the Basic Cancer Research Center into new quarters.

"This new addition will give teaching laboratories, departmental offices, classroom space and research laboratories more space," Carter said. "It will also provide some of the newest labs that are critical to the areas of education."

Carter said the three-story structure will be completed within 18 months. The addition to Ackert is the last project to use money from the $30 million Crumbling Classrooms fund, which the university obtained several years ago.

Private funding from the cancer center will contribute to the total cost of the addition, as well as possible federal funding, Carter said.

Carter said the addition will be constructed on the east side of the existing building and will be a benefit to all departments because of the added educational value.

"The biggest benefit will go directly to the academic side," Carter said. "Any time we provide new teaching and research labs, we directly benefit the students and the public."

Stephen White, associate dean of arts and sciences, said the addition primarily will be for research purposes and will put the cancer research center back onto the campus. The center now is located in east Manhattan in the industrial park.

"We receive a large number of research grants each year, and this new facility will allow us to better compete for research support," White said.

"It will also be nice for the faculty affiliated with the cancer research center to be in close proximity of where the research is undertaken."

Carter said departments outside of life and physical science also will benefit from the new addition.

He said once biochemistry and biology are relocated, it will allow the Department of Chemistry to move out of Willard Hall.

The Department of Art then will move into the space vacated by chemistry, which he said will help consolidate the department.

Carter also said the space left vacant in King, Leasure and Burt halls by biochemistry and biology then will be renovated and developed for other uses.

"It has been our plan since the start to develop a science and engineering complex," Carter said.

"The outcome is Fielder Hall and the addition to Ackert."

White said graduate students in biology and biochemistry will benefit the most from the addition because of the work they do in research laboratories.

He said many work as research assistants during graduate school, and with three large instructional labs as part of the addition, he said these students will get even more hands-on experience.

"It is important for these students to have a connection with the research department while they are in school," White said.

"By having the experience of working with professors, it gives them a sense of what biological research is all about."

Carter said Ackert Hall was built in 1968.

He said the intention was that an addition would be made to the building within five years after the original building was completed.

However, funding never was obtained to make it a reality.

"It will also provide some of the newest labs that are critical to the areas of education."

Football press conference provides updates, answers

By RICHARD SMITH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Questions that had been hovering over the 2000 Wildcat football team for weeks were cleared up somewhat during a news conference Tuesday afternoon at the Vanier Football Complex.

K-State Head coach Bill Snyder provided updates on the statuses of troubled players Joe Hall and Thomas Barnett and, for the first time, publicly commented on the demise of a proposed home-and-home contract to play the University of Southern California.

Snyder said Hall will not participate in spring practice while attempting to become academically eligible for next season. He said Hall was enrolled in classes, and that it still was feasible for Hall to achieve his academic requirements (having successfully accumulated 24 credit hours) in time for next season.

"He is making a very diligent effort to become eligible as we speak," Snyder said. "He will not take part in what we're doing. He's just focused on trying to get through, and do what he needs to do in the classroom."

Snyder said Barnett also would be kept out of spring practice as he attempts to defend himself from kidnapping charges in an incident last month.

Barnett allegedly kidnapped former K-State running back Leon Edwards and drove him to Wichita, forcing him to return a shotgun that Barnett had lost to Edwards in a bet.

Snyder declined comment on the nature of the allegations or on Barnett's long-term future, but said Barnett would be free of football obligations while the legal matters are attended to.

"Thomas is involved in something extremely serious," Snyder said. "He's not with our football team in a practice fashion, or anything else for that matter. He's got his hands full ... attempting to deal with the issues of greatest concern to him."

In K-State's spring football media guide, neither Barnett nor Hall are listed on the team roster.

On a somewhat lighter note, Snyder also touched on the subject of the breakdown of a recent contract proposal for future games between K-State and USC.

Snyder said he passed over the potential deal because USC had required an answer sooner than he could provide them with one, as he waited to see how potential deals with two other prominent schools played out.

"There was a particular situation with teams I will not mention, two prominent teams — one from the Midwest, one from the west coast — that were involved in a schedule break-up," he said.

"It was a possibility that we could become a replacement for one of those teams. Not too long after receiving the contract, I received a phone call that said 'USC needs to have an answer ASAP' and I said 'I'm not prepared to give an answer ASAP.'"

Snyder said that although the two unnamed schools have since dissolved their contract, K-State was not selected to replace either. He said he didn't think USC had taken care of their scheduling holes, and that a renewed deal with the Trojans was possible but not likely.

STRIKING similarities

BY MIKE VIETTI

2000 team predicted to repeat success seen by players in 1998

Don't look now, but the 2000 K-State football team already is beginning to draw comparisons to the 1998 team that came within a single game of playing for the national championship.

Even head coach Bill Snyder admits it, if only to a limited degree.

"There's an awful lot of similarities between this point in time in 1998 and the present time," Snyder said. "I wouldn't want anybody to see any further into that than it really is. It's basically the fact that we have not graduated a large number of seniors."

In 1998, 18 starters returned for the Wildcats, nine on offense and nine on defense. For the 2000 season, K-State brings back 15 starters, eight on offense and seven on defense.

K-State finished the 1997 season ranked seventh after beating Syracuse 35-17 in the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl, while the Cats ended last season ranked sixth after defeating Washington in the Culligan Holiday Bowl 25-21.

The Wildcats finished 1997 54th in the nation in total offense and fourth in total defense. After last season, K-State stood 55th in total offense and second in total defense.

What differs from 1998 is that there are more question marks at key positions as the Wildcats head into spring practice in preparation for the spring game April 29.

The following is a positional breakdown based upon the latest K-State depth chart. Asterisks indicate returning starters.

Snyder said the latest depth chart is based on how it looked at the end of the 1999 season, which accounts for the position of Eli Roberson, who redshirted last year. Snyder said Jonathan Beasley is the starter for now, although Roberson could change that by the start of next season.

"He will have every opportunity in the spring to make his way and move himself up the depth chart," Snyder said. "Do I want it to be a tremendous battle? Most certainly I do. I want it to be as competitive as it possibly can be."

Snyder mentioned Beasley's completion percentage of 44 percent as something the senior needs to improve upon to remain the starter.

With the uncertain status of would-be senior Joe Hall, the running back competition appears to boil down to David Allen and Josh Scobey. Allen rushed for 364 yards on 74 carries while scoring six touchdowns on the ground last year. He also caught a touchdown pass and returned two punts to touchdowns.

Scobey originally signed with K-State out of high school but did not qualify academically and spent the past two seasons at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M, where he rushed for 2,423 yards and 31 touchdowns.

Both Allen and Scobey welcomed the challenge, saying the competition would help each to become better players.

"Everywhere I go — there's always going to be good running backs wherever you go," Scobey said. "Whoever's the best runner up here will play."

At fullback, Snyder said Johnno Lazetich has recovered from last season's bout with concussions and should be ready to go for the 2000 season. Nick Hoheisel saw action in several games last season and should compete for the backup job with Brandt Quick.

Wide receiver possibly is the Wildcats' best stocked position, with the top-four receivers all returning from last season. Morgan burst onto the Big 12 scene last year, catching 42 passes for 1,007 yards and nine touchdowns, while Lockett's numbers dropped from his freshman campaign to 33 receptions for 531 yards and three touchdowns. If injury-prone Brandon Clark stays on the field, K-State's group of receivers figures to be among the best in the Big 12.

At tight end, Shad Meier caught eight passes for 105 yards while Nick Warren hauled in one pass for nine yards. Both have seen extensive action the past two seasons, with Warren entering games when K-State went to formations with two-tight ends.

Each of the projected starters on the offensive line has seen extensive game-time action at some point in his career. Milford Stephenson started seven games at left tackle in 1998 and can play any position on the line. Andy Eby started four games at right guard last year, while Randall Cummins started every game last season en route to first-team All-Big 12 honors. Steve Washington saw playing time as a backup at guard last year, and John Robertson started eight games at right guard and three at right tackle last season.

K-State returns its defensive line, minus three-year starter Darren Howard, a potential first-round NFL draft pick. The Cats return most of their depth and should be able to rotate several players in and out of games to stay fresh. Monty Beisel is the returning sack leader on the team with 6.5 from last season, while also making 12 stops behind the line of scrimmage. Chris Johnson is just behind, having totaled 4.5 sacks and nine tackles for loss in spot duty. Mario Fatafehi was named Big 12 Defensive Newcomer of the Year by Big 12 coaches last season, when he posted 48 tackles, 3.5 sacks and 11 tackles for a loss.

Each position in the linebacking core is up for grabs with nearly every player on the three-deep having a legitimate chance at starting in the fall. Ben Leber started 12 games last year at the Mike spot, but will shift to the strongside this season. Turrelle Williams, who actually was the starter in 1997 in front of Jeff Kelly before suffering a season ending injury, finally will get his chance to become a mainstay. Snyder said the highly touted Warren Lott has overcome his own injury problems and will contend for a starting spot as well, while Terry Pierce broke Mark Simoneau's bench-pressing mark last season as a redshirt freshman. Jason Kazar has started in the past because of injuries to Simoneau, but Snyder said his job is not secure with Josh Buhl on the horizon.

Despite three returning starters and finishing last season first in the country in pass efficiency defense, the secondary still might have a different look next year. Snyder said he is still tinkering with putting Carter or Newman at free safety in order to get as much speed as possible on the field. Carter tied for the lead in interceptions last season with five, while Butler chipped in two and Proctor, Newman, McGraw and Tyler each recorded one pick.

From a special-teams standpoint, Jamie Rheem finished second in the running for the Lou Groza Award last year and should continue in the footsteps of Martin Gramatica. Travis Brown is the punter for now, but Snyder alluded to the serious challenge incoming freshman punter Jared Britte will pose for those duties. K-State finished 104th in the country in net punting last year with Brown and Mike Ronsick taking all the snaps. Allen is 172 yards behind the all-time record in punt return yards and is tied for the career lead in punt return touchdowns with seven.

Get rich now by putting money on Wildcats for 2001 Orange Bowl

I shouldn't be here right now. If I were smart, right now I would be sunning myself and sipping Mai Tais on the deck of my beach-front house in Tahiti. I would not be writing this column for $1.00 per inch. And I sure wouldn't be taking my Concepts of Electronic Media test today.

There's good money in predictions, my friends. From Gordon Gecko to Mel Kiper Jr. to Vincent "Shorty" DeLuca, all kinds of people are out there making a handsome living by knowing stuff before everyone else does. And I want in.

The roughly 10,472-1 odds against the St. Louis Rams winning this year's Super Bowl would've made me rich. We're talking "Hollywood" Henderson rich. But you, me and everyone else who actually understands the game of football missed the boat last year.

The perpetually bottom-feeding Rams winning the Super Bowl, the screwiest notion of all time ("Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire?"

hadn't been conceived yet) actually came to pass. And some secretary who's never seen an NFL game and chose the Rams in the office pool because she liked the pretty colors of their uniforms is living in my beach house.

Well, I'm not going to take it any more. This year, I'm going to beat Vegas, Sports Illustrated and everyone else to the punch with my fearless football prediction. And since I try to provide a public service with this column, you guys can cash in with me, too. Here it is: the K-State Wildcats will win a berth in the Orange Bowl, college football's national championship. I'll wait a sec while you call your bookies.

Back? Okay. Now, here's my thinking: the circumstances surrounding this year's team are strikingly similar to that of two seasons ago, when the Bishop/Kelly/McDonald-led Wildcats stormed to within nine minutes of a berth in the national title game.

The Cats have a talented team stocked with experience (they only lost six starters). They have a returning senior quarterback who was mad-deningly inconsistent but showed flashes of excellent play. They have a defense that could put the clamps on anyone. And most of all, they have a favorable schedule, meaning they they don't have to play in Lincoln, Neb.

The genius in this get-rich-quick scheme is that no one else seems to realize this. Across the land, all of the usual suspects are being tossed about: Nebraska. Florida State. Michigan. Miami. Alabama. That team Michael Vick plays for. But all of them have equal, if not greater, barriers standing in their way than K-State.

Michigan has to survive in a rugged Big Ten. Miami is a question mark, and will have to prove their worth against a tough schedule. For Alabama, no Shaun Alexander = No

SEC title. And Texas has no running game, a ridiculous quarterback controversy and an improving Big 12 south to deal with.

Florida State is in good shape. I think they'll probably lock up one berth in the Orange Bowl. That leaves K-State and Nebraska for the other. Though Nebraska will have a fantastic offense, they lost a lot of key players on defense, and the road to the Big 12 title leads through Manhattan. The Wildcats probably would lose this game in Lincoln, but fortunately they don't have to play it there. K-State will win the Big 12 Conference.

The Wildcats have big holes to patch on defense, but they also have players who will do a nice job as duct tape. Defensive end Chris Johnson did nothing but make plays in limited action last year, and should be a capable replacement for Darren Howard.

Only Ben Leber returns to start in the linebacking corps, but Turelle Williams, Jason Kazar, Josh Buhl, Terry Pierce and Warren Lott all have shown flashes of ability. Whether they can put it all together is another story, but the competition for spots should make better players of all involved.

Safety Lamar Chapman also departed, but the secondary is deep and experienced for the Cats. Jon McGraw, Dyshod Carter or Terence Newman could step in for him and do a fine job.

The key to K-State's success will be, again, the offense.

Quarterbacking has to get better, and it should, one way or another. Jonathan Beasley should improve noticeably with a year of experience (remember Michael Bishop's improvement from junior to senior year?), and if redshirt freshman Eli Roberson is able to beat him out, that means Roberson surely is doing something right, so either way, the position should improve.

K-State easily has the best receiving corps in the Big 12 with returnees Quincy Morgan and Aaron Lockett, and what should be a capable running back duo of David Allen and Josh Scobey. The only question is a line that lost two starters to graduation, and one to the long arm of the law, but there is some experience returning to ease the blow.

The Wildcats have one of the most talented coaching staffs in the land. My money is on them to patch holes and groom replacements faster and better than any other program in the land.

Yes, they might not be the trendy pick right now, but believe me, the Cats will be in the running all the way next year. And when they are, maybe we'll all run into each other, say, lounging on a beach in Tahiti.

House ends Clinton effort regarding organ distribution

By LAURA MECKLER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Weighing into a bitter battle, the House voted Tuesday to kill a Clinton administration effort to move more hearts, livers and kidneys to the sickest transplant patients.

The legislation would strip the Department of Health and Human Services of its power to set transplant policy and comes after years of tension between HHS and the United Network for Organ Sharing, the private firm that has long run the transplant system under a government contract.

The House approved the measure, 275-147. It also agreed, by voice vote, to an amendment that kills controversial HHS regulations directing more organs to the sickest patients — even if they live far from the donor.

President Clinton has threatened to veto the bill, which sides with the transplant network on virtually every point of dispute.

The legislation also encourages organ donation, something all sides support. It calls for financial assistance for living donors who give away a kidney or part of a liver, and grants for states to encourage donation.

The Senate has not yet acted on the issue, and both sides were hoping for a resolution there. Sens. Bill Frist, R-Tenn., and Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., had planned to introduce compromise legislation Wednesday that would give an expert commission power to mediate disputes.

But the pair had not yet reached agreement, and Frist prepared to introduce legislation on his own.

The basic problem is supply and demand. Only about half of families asked to donate organs say yes, and many families never are asked. Meanwhile, nearly 5,000 people die each year waiting for organ transplants, and 68,530 people are waiting for transplants today.

The legislation would give the transplant network total control over the rules governing how to distribute more than 20,000 organs that are donated each year.

Under the network's system, patients who live in the same area as donors have first chance at organs, even if a sicker patient lives just outside the border. The Clinton administration wants to eliminate those geographic barriers, saying someone's chance at life should not be dictated by where they live.

"Healthy people are getting organs before they need them and the very sick are not getting organs before they die," said Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich. "If you like that situation, this is a bill you ought to support."

The transplant network and many transplant centers — particularly smaller hospitals — fear that change will siphon away locally donated organs to other centers, jeopardizing their programs. They also argue that HHS has no right to write the rules, calling its effort to direct policy a power grab.

"Is the government, is this bureaucracy up here equipped to make these decisions?" asked Rep. Michael Bilirakis, R-Fla., the bill's chief sponsor. "Do we want politics determining life and death matters? I think not."

Supporters of the system also argue that states would have little incentive to encourage organ donation if the organs were being shipped to other states.

"If you're allowed to keep the fruits of your labor, you're going to work harder. If the fruits of your labor are going to be sent to another part of this country, that increases the chances that you won't work as hard," said Democratic Rep. Thomas Barrett of Wisconsin, where donation rates are high and the state has sued HHS to stop the new transplant regulations.

Congress has intervened in this emotional battle before, keeping the HHS regulations on hold for nearly two years.

In the meantime, Congress ordered the prestigious Institute of Medicine to study the system. In its report, the institute recommended that HHS assert more oversight over the transplant system. It also backed up the core of the HHS regulation, recommending that the geographic barriers be broken down.

Opponents of the legislation repeatedly cited that report as they argued that Congress should not strip HHS of its authority.

It is a time of new beginnings. It represents a change of approaches. SpringDance 2000: "Genesis" marks a time of change for the K-State dance department, Wanda Ebright, assistant professor of dance, said.

The theme, genesis, represents a state of rebirth, renewal in the department," Ebright said.

She said the theme to SpringDance, which will be at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium, was chosen to show the new momentum and impulse, as well as the overhaul, of the dance program.

"It's the changing of the curriculum to reflect the pre-professional approach rather than the general approach," she said.

The theme includes showing the commitment the department has to dance. It is emphasizing recruiting as well as making sure students have options to choose from when they graduate, Ebright said.

She said the theme was chosen from a list of words that suggested different feelings.

"Everyone felt a personal attachment to the theme and it allowed them to branch out," she said.

The dance pieces are choreographed by the dance faculty with the exception of a guest artist piece and three pieces choreographed by students.

"Each choreographer was free to choose how the theme affected them," Ebright said.

The dance styles include classical ballet, contemporary ballet, modern dance, jazz, tap and Latin, she said.

One of the modern pieces is choreographed by guest artist, Tyrone Aiken, director of artistic and educational programs for Kansas City Friends of Alvin Ailey.

"In an abstract sense, the piece looks at the last century," Aiken said.

The piece is broken into four different sections.

The first section starts off as a solo using music by Philip Glass. Aiken said the section represents the impending doom or the fear of an end toward the end of a century.

"Because I'm an optimist at heart, the next section is one of rebirth," Aiken said. "It shows a wonderment of one's surroundings, the beginning of a century and new things to accomplish."

The third section incorporates jazz music into the piece.

"It shows the profound effect jazz music had on the century, including the effect on industry and growth," he said.

The fourth section shows the end of the century. "As time goes on, we have to realize everything's in our backyard," Aiken said.

"I was really trying to look at the musical form and textures in music as it relates to people who want to be heard."

He said SpringDance is a good way to understand the value of dance as an art.

"Art teaches us about who we are, but not in the assuming way," he said. "It gives us another way of looking at the world."

Ebright said people will be able to relate to SpringDance.

"All the things that people value are put into motion," she said. "A new energy will be magnified with this program."

Sarah Mermis, senior in dance, said SpringDance is a chance for the students to show what they've been working on all semester.

"It's a chance to perform the techniques we practice every day," Mermis said. "We're also able to get the full experience of what a career in dance might be like."

SpringDance also is a chance for students to support students, Lizzy Work, senior in dance, said.

"There's a lot more people in SpringDance than what most people realize," Work said. "It's a good opportunity to come see your friends perform and support the arts."

Ebright said people should take advantage of a good dance performance.

"SpringDance shows that people don't have to go to New York to see good dance," she said.

Jenny Rifford dances on pointe while practicing for the SpringDance 2000 performance this weekend.

Jenny Rifford, sophomore in theater, and Kerri Bates, senior in graphic design, perform during a SpringDance 2000 practice Tuesday evening in McCain Auditorium. The performance is at 8 p.m. on Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

Norwich, Beach swap art

By NATALIA FARMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The faculty of the K-State Department of Art and the Norwich School of Art and Design in Norwich, England have switched exhibits.

"Drawing Connections" is a faculty exchange exhibition being presented at K-State's Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art until June 1. The exhibit opened April 1 and includes the work of more than 50 faculty members.

Lindsay Smith, exhibition designer at the Beach art museum, said K-State has the faculty exhibition every year, but this is the first time it has coordinated and collaborated with the Norwich School.

"There will be two parts showing the mixed media styles of each set of faculty members," she said. "We display anything described as a drawing and there is a wide range of art, including graphic design, photographs and sculptures."

Smith said because "Drawing Connections" will travel to England for an exhibition in fall 2000, travel and packaging concerns necessitated a size limit for the pieces.

"A lot of effort and craftsmanship has been put into this presentation, which makes it a very good, handsome show," she said.

Teresa Schmidt, associate professor of art at K-State, said the museum began its faculty display in March 1998 with "Faculty Biennial."

She said it partly was her idea to incorporate the Norwich School of Art and Design when she traveled to England in February 1997 on a teacher exchange program.

"I love 'Drawing Connections' because it really feels like we are connecting the oceans," she said. "We are making a statement and a definition about our drawings."

Schmidt said students will benefit from the faculties' work by seeing such a variety of pictures and drawings that all possess different styles and uses.

"A lot of people have worked very hard preparing these catalogs," she said. "This is not just traditional work, different perspectives of characters are shown from person to person."

K-State's art department conducts annual faculty and student exchanges with the Norwich School. It was an idea that originated with Duane Noblett, associate professor of art, in 1992 and expanded in 1995.

"Today, we have 30 students involved to date," he said. "It's an extremely successful program that is a thrilling, enlightening and enriching experience for students."

Noblett said there has been great cooperation with the Norwich School because it is an agricultural school, providing a strong connection with K-State.

"The exchange is such a unique experience that changes the students' lives," he said.

"I think European students are very cosmopolitan and our students come back with a lot of confidence and voice their opinions in a different perspective."

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art is open

■ Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.
■ Additional hours Thursday from 10 a.m. to 8:30 p.m.
■ Sunday, 1 to 5 p.m.

Wood carvings on display at Strecker-Nelson Gallery

By BROOKE ERICKSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Bright colors and wood are what comprise the 25 pieces of the current exhibit at Strecker-Nelson Gallery, on Poyntz Avenue.

Brandon Sherwood of Salina, Kan., has his wood carvings on exhibit and for sale at the gallery. His pieces range from $350 to $3,000 in value and will be on display through April 28.

Sherwood began carving as a child.

His father was a home builder so Sherwood had access to wood and the instruments to carve it.

Sherwood also is a protege student of the late Lester Raymer.

The gallery where Raymer worked now is showing his work and is appropriately named The Raymer Gallery.

Barbara Nelson, co-owner of the Strecker-Nelson Gallery, said she has known Sherwood for a while and loves his art.

"His art is extremely unique," Nelson said. "His art shows his point of view."

She said every piece of the exhibit has a message.

She spoke of one piece, a carved mirror with the title "Credendo Vides," meaning "by believing, we see."

"The cynic says, 'seeing is believing,'" Nelson said.

Jay Nelson, co-owner of the gallery, compared Sherwood's work to that of Mary Engelbreit.

"He uses bright colors like gold, pastels, and black and white checker boards," Jay Nelson said. "His art makes you happy."

When you see these pieces, they make you smile. They're very heartfelt."

Sherwood said ideas for his work come straight from his head.

"I call it Sherwood's force," he said. "I'm walking into the force. I communicate with the pieces as I am making them. I form a relationship with them."

He said he is almost at the next level of his art creativity.

"The flood gates have opened," he said. One piece he spoke about was a cabinet that stands 8 feet tall, "Hands of Time."

On this cabinet there are numerous sayings and messages. Two of the messages are, "Can't turn back the hands of time" and "A minute lost, you'll never find."

Another piece Sherwood talked about was one that represents his family.

It's called "My Loving Rooster, and Three Golden Eggs."

His wife is the rooster and his three children are the three golden eggs, he said.

Mass Street in LAWRENCE

STORIES BY SARAH MCCAFFREY ■ PHOTOS BY REED DUNN

Wide range of attractions offers visitors variety of activities

Whatever visitors to Lawrence are interested in, they most likely can find it on Lawrence's main artery, Massachusetts Street.

The Creation Station is a Massachusetts Street landmark that celebrated its 10th anniversary in November. The store offers a unique variety of merchandise ranging from international clothing to beaded door curtains.

"It's a big variety," Jenn Fortune, assistant manager, said. "We have the largest selection of incense in town. We sell imported cigarettes without additives, sterling jewelry and nice clothing."

Saleswoman Laura Macaluso said she thinks the wide range of merchandise helps attract customers. "We have a variety of products, from votives to Buddha statues," she said. "We also sell clothing in a variety of sizes."

The international clothing selection helps distinguish the Creation Station from other retail stores.

"The clothing line is really unique," Fortune said. "We have a lot of sarongs from Bali that are handpainted."

Many of the other products in the store are imported from other countries, helping to draw a more diverse customer base.

"Half of our products are imported," Fortune said. "We have some international students that come in to shop."

Another aspect attracting customers is the casual atmosphere, Macaluso said.

"It's a really laid-back environment," she said. "Everyone comes in here."

Love Garden Sounds is a music lover's playground.

The shop provides a large stylistic selection of music available in many mediums. LPs, compact discs, vinyls and cassettes are just a few of the choices that shoppers have when it comes to purchasing their favorite music.

One of the aspects that distinguishes Love Garden Sounds from chain stores is their vinyl record selection.

Debby VanderWall, buyer of five years, said the vinyl records attract music enthusiasts and collectors.

Love Garden Sounds also buys used records, CDs and other music mediums from its customers.

VanderWall said the buy-back option is very popular with students.

"Students come in needing cash at the end of the semester," she said.

The wide selection of music available in the store has occurred through a trial-and-error process.

"We try not to bring in anything too obscure that most listeners wouldn't know what it was," Cory Willis, co-owner, said. "Our wide selection is a result of 10 years of mistakes."

ABOVE: Customers shop on the bike level of Sunflower Outdoor & Bike Shop in Lawrence. The store specializes in all types of outdoor equipment and clothing. BOTTOM: Sugartown Traders is one of several stores on Massachusetts Street that offers customers vintage products. Even though it carries vintage clothing, it also offers a large selection of current-style clothing.

Another factor setting Love Garden Sounds apart from the mainstream record outlets are the salespeople.

"We hire people that know about music," Willis said. "Independent stores get employees that have an interest in music."

Besides music, the store also offers items such as comic books and T-shirts.

"We offer things other stores wouldn't," VanderWall said. "Our comic books aren't run-of-the-mill superhero stories, either."

If cycling or the outdoors is your passion, the Sunflower Outdoor and Bike Shop has all of the supplies you need to make you a happy camper.

Sunflower Bike Shop is a Massachusetts Street tradition. The store has been owned by the same people since 1972. A fire in 1997 was followed by a remodeling and expansion.

Aside from an assortment of bikes, the store also sells many other outdoor products. Items like kayaks, canoes, camping supplies, Army surplus goods and clothing geared toward sport and outdoor enthusiasts all are available at Sunflower Outdoor and Bike Shop.

The large selection of sporting goods attracts clientele not only from the Lawrence area, but other cities as well.

"Most of the customers are KU students, but we do get people from KC," said salesperson Christy Gigliotti, senior in art education at KU.

Saleswoman Amy Price, senior in western civilization at KU, said she has worked with customers that have come from distances as far as Topeka and Manhattan.

Price said the store is a great place to work as well as shop.

"I came in every day for three months and asked the owner for a job, because I really wanted to work here," she said.

Sugartown Traders offers students stylish clothes at affordable prices.

"We're different from retail stores because we're resale, but we're a combination of retail, thrift stores and consignment stores," co-owner Tamyra Heim said.

The store has been on Massachusetts Street since 1997 and offers students and the community a mix of vintage clothing and popular styles.

"Probably 90 percent of our store is current-style clothing," Heim said. "We look for styles which come out within the past two to three years. We also have vintage clothing from the '30s, '40s, '50s and '60s."

There are a few items that are in constant demand.

"Anything Abercrombie and Fitch we can turn around in a day," salesman Eric Loffland said. "Anything flared or dark colored sells, too."

The buyers try to look for items that will be more popular when the seasons begin to change.

"With warm weather, logo tees are a good seller. We try to sell those for $6 or under," Heim said. "If you buy them new at a retail store, they can cost you $20 or more."

The contemporary selection and vintage finds draws a variety of shoppers.

"There are a lot of college students and a lot of women over 30," Loffland said. "There aren't as many guys that come in."

Heim said the store usually has a rush coinciding with certain college events.

"We do have busy times around the start of school and the beginning of the semester," she said. "Before spring break, students are needing money. When they leave town for the summer or are moving, a lot of people want to sell back items."

Heim said part of the appeal of the store is that customers are able to walk out of the store with extra money or something new after they've traded in their old clothes.

Popular and trendy clothing are what buyers at Arizona Trading Company look for in used clothing.

"We look for current casual styles," store manager Ellen Wise said. "We buy current casual styles. What we buy depends on the season. We try to buy items that we see selling within the next week."

Wise said basic items such as jeans, T-shirts and shorts always are big sellers.

"One thing that everyone comes in looking for are Hawaiian shirts," said salesperson Amber Smith, senior in sociology at KU. "It's usually the guys that come in looking for them. The girls want tank tops."

Arizona Trading Company's focus on customer service is an integral aspect of their operations.

"Our focus is on customer service," Wise said. "It can be an intimidating situation at first."

The focus on customers has earned the Kansas City area branch the honor of being voted friendliest service by readers of Pitch Weekly.

Aside from pleasing customers, the attention paid to customer service also has attracted employees. Good customer service was one of the reasons why Smith chose to work at the store.

"When I shopped here, the people were friendly and nice," Smith said. They were always having fun. I always have a good time here. I rarely dread coming to work."

Lawrence sub shop satisfies customers for more than 20 years

Despite its name, the Yello Sub has nothing to do with the popular Beatles song or the Navy.

The Yello Sub is a locally owned and operated sandwich shop with two locations in Lawrence, one near the University of Kansas on 12th Street, and the other on 23rd Street.

The stores have been in operation in Lawrence for more than 20 years.

The menu offers 43 choices of hot subs as well as a vegetarian menu. Students can get their subs to go, have them delivered or dine in at the restaurant. Catering also is an option for larger parties.

Both locations use an unusual system to deliver customer orders. After customers place their orders, they are given a playing card until their food is ready. The servers call out the number of the card corresponding with the order when it is ready.

"Cards are easy and simple," said customer Matt Cabden, KU senior in industrial design. "No one would steal a card because it isn't important."

The sub shop is very popular with students on campus, employee Dalin Horner said.

"Mostly college students and ex-students reminiscing about the good old days come in," Horner said.

The shop stays busy throughout the year, but things tend to slow down during summer and over school breaks.

Game days are another big draw for the campus location.

"On game days and the Day on the Hill, we were backed up for seven hours straight," Horner said.

The restaurant appeals to customers for different reasons.

"It's better than Subway," Cabden said. "I think the reward card is good, too. It's close and they have nice food. Everyone is friendly."

Yello Sub also differs from most sandwich shops through the way sandwiches are prepared.

"We're different from other stores mostly in the unique way we prepare our sandwiches," operations manager Charles Doemland said. "We cook them open-faced in a pizza oven and top them once they emerge. Our bread is also made from scratch daily on location."

Customers also said they like the casual atmosphere of the two locations.

Matt Cabden, senior in industrial design at the University of Kansas, waits for his order outside the Yello Sub at 624 W. 12th Street in Lawrence. The 12th Street location also houses the Glass Onion, a restaurant geared toward vegetarians.

"It kind of has its own personality," customer Cody Cullen said. "They play good music here."

Customer praises like these also helped Yello Sub win the award for the best sub sandwiches in Lawrence.

SITE

co-founder of the site, said groups such as fraternities have an advantage with seniors who can tell underclassmen about the best instructors.

He said AndersonHall.com can even the field.

"It's really for the little guy," he said. "You don't have to pay commission or join a fraternity to get that information."

Joseph Claes, a 1994 graduate of K-State, said he didn't foresee any student objections and that instructors need to consider what their evaluations have to say.

"We hope they will look at it with a critical eye, and if they don't like it, don't change," he said. "It's not a mandate."

The site will offer much more than just surveys, Jeremy Claes said.

It will also feature classified ads, articles and columns to keep students coming back, all free of charge, he said.

"There's really not a place to sell your furniture online that's free," he said.

Jeremy Claes said the site's news feature isn't intended to serve as competition to the Collegian or other campus media, but will feature fewer stories per week with a more in-depth news magazine approach.

Joseph Claes said the extra options on AndersonHall.com might help to bring in neutral respondents to the surveys.

"If it's just an opinion site, you'll just get the angry people," he said.

Another option that had been discussed is music. Iain Wilson, senior in radio-television and business management, said Jeremy Claes had spoken to him about the idea of putting an option on AndersonHall.com where visitors could choose background music from an online database.

"You've got to have something to keep people coming back," Wilson said. "Everybody loves music."

Wilson said he would like to see the survey work.

"You sit in class and fill out a t-val, but you never get a chance to see if everybody is thinking what you are," he said.

With its first day as a completed site, Jeremy Claes said visitors might not see as much data as they want to, but they should try to provide what they can on classes they have taken.

The site was brought online now, he said, so it can be tested for ideas he plans to implement next fall.

Since the site is affiliated with other sites he and his brother have established, Jeremy Claes said he would like to put in options like book sales and tutor finders later on.

"This is really a big test for us," he said.

Elian's father issued visas to visit U.S.

By GEORGE GEDDA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — American diplomats in Havana issued visas Tuesday to Elian Gonzalez's father, but Cuban officials said he will call off his proposed trip to the United States unless he is assured of temporary custody of his 6-year old son.

An attorney for the boy's Miami relatives, who are fighting to retain custody of Elian, said negotiations aimed at reuniting Juan Miguel Gonzalez with his son appeared to be breaking down without agreement. However, the talks resumed in late afternoon.

"We have not heard from the attorneys for the relatives in Miami that they consider the talks to have been broken off," Justice spokesman Myron Marlin said on Tuesday. "We continue to hope that we can all work together to resolve this in a fair, orderly and prompt manner."

Outside the Miami home where Elian has lived since he was rescued from a Thanksgiving shipwreck that killed his mother, about 200 angry protesters broke down a barrier and formed a human chain. "Elian is not leaving!" they chanted.

Olga Hernandez said they "saw a bus and they thought they (Immigration and Naturalization Service officials) were coming to take him."

City of Miami Police just stood by and watched.

Earlier Tuesday, Elian's cousin Marisleys Gonzalez was hospitalized for exhaustion after fainting during a round of television interviews. Hospital officials said she was in stable condition and family spokesman Armando Gutierrez said she would stay in the hospital overnight.

After visiting her in the hospital, Elian's great-uncle, Lazaro Gonzalez told reporters: "The government is going to destroy this family. We are only trying to protect this child."

Immigration officials have spent the past two days negotiating with the Miami family over how to transfer temporary custody of Elian from Lazaro Gonzalez to Elian's father. U.S. officials raised the possibility that Juan Miguel Gonzalez could travel to Miami to get his son.

Absent an agreement, a Justice Department official said a letter could be sent to Lazaro Gonzalez announcing that temporary custody would be transferred from him to Elian's father.

A follow-up letter would provide instructions on how and when the transfer would take place, said the official, asking not to be identified.

Looking for an ADVENTURE

THE ADVENTURE OF A LIFETIME BEGINS WITH AIR FORCE ROTC

Are you a:
- Freshman
- Sophomore
- Junior/Senior with 2 academic years to go starting fall semester

Air Force ROTC is an elective -- but it's far more than that. Air Force ROTC is also a program that teaches you to be a leader, develops your management skills, and helps you grow into a well-rounded and self-assured person. For those who qualify, Air Force ROTC can even help pay for college through its scholarship programs. When you graduate, you'll also become an Air Force officer doing exciting, meaningful things alongside other great people in fascinating places around the world. If you're interested, it's not too late to join. There's no obligation -- as a matter of fact, you don't have to decide to join the military until your junior year. So go ahead, give it a try -- you won't regret it.

Acacia seeks readmittance

■ IFC board overturns 5-year ban; presidents' approval still required.

By MICHELLE BERTUGLIA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

The Interfraternity Council's Board of Directors has unanimously supported Acacia fraternity's petition for readmittance to the IFC, Mike Goodpasture, IFC president said.

Acacia was sanctioned on May 9, 1999, for four hazing violations, three substance-abuse violations and two human-rights violations brought forth by a former pledge. The sanction was for Acacia to be unaffiliated with K-State for five years.

The five members of the Acacia Board of Directors met with IFC on Wednesday evening to petition for readmittance as a K-State fraternity. Goodpasture said the next step for the board is to gain the approval of the council of IFC presidents April 17. If approved by the IFC and Acacia alumni, a new Acacia chapter could be formed by fall 2001.

"The removal of Acacia makes it clear that hazing and fraternity misconduct is not something we condone," Goodpasture said. "The approval of the petition of reinstatement says when someone admits their mistakes and does the appropriate things to find the solutions that we are willing to listen and always will be."

The Acacia alumni formulated a 25-man task force last November to start from scratch with Acacia and get it back on track, said Gary Haag, alumni president of the Acacia board.

In the past six months, the alumni have written a new mission and vision statement for Acacia and set up a governance model for the Acacia board. The alumni said in the meeting that part of the problem Acacia had last spring was lack of direction from the alumni.

David Woolfolk, vision mission chairman of the Acacia board, said the task force has taken an idealist view of how to develop a vision statement and came up with the vision statement of "together, building exceptional lives."

Woolfolk said the three most important words in the new mission statement are "KSU," "brotherhood" and "community." The alumni said they want the new members to focus on the building of the individual, living the vision statement and the path it will take to get there.

None of the men sanctioned last May were involved in the task force that worked to reformulate the fraternity. All of these men were offered alumni status, Haag said, and if they want to reapply for active status in the house at the undergraduate level, they must reapply through the alumni board and IFC.

The new Acacia chapter will be made up of new

JUSTIN HAYWORTH/COLLEGLIAN

Martha Babb, sophomore in computer science, gets an airbrush tattoo from Pashur of Odyssey Art out of Nashville, Tenn., Wednesday morning in the Union Courtyard. Union Program Council sponsored the event, which also included free caricature drawings.

SKIN & INK

BY TAMARA MANN

Students fill Union Courtyard for 4 hours getting tattoos, caricatures

Students who had their caricatures drawn in the Union Courtyard on Wednesday most likely expect their picture to be an exact portrayal of themselves.

"They're cute and fun, but I think that sometimes they decide to pick out a more unfavorable characteristic I never knew I had and emphasize it," Regina Munoz, sophomore in elementary education, said.

Students formed continuous lines from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. to have their caricature drawn or have tattoos airbrushed onto their body.

"We've been waiting for 45 minutes to have our portrait drawn," Melissa Huenink, sophomore in pre-nursing, said. "Since it's free and just for fun, I can't really complain. I think it's interesting to see how a total stranger picks up on your characteristics and decides to portray you."

The event was sponsored by the Union Program Council, which brings artists, films, exhibits, musicians, speakers and other special attractions to K-State.

"UPC has budgeted a certain amount of money each year to bring people here," said John Christy, sophomore in financial management and UPC Special Events Committee chairman-elect. "We sometimes get groups' names out of catalogs that do advertising for them. They get paid a certain amount, and we generally take them out to lunch. It's not a bad deal."

E.J. Arnold, sophomore in pre-health professions, opted to take advantage of both the caricature drawings and tattoos.

"I got an oriental-writing tattoo on my arm earlier, but it came off after I went outside and sweated some. I came back to re-do it and decided to get a caricature drawing while I was here," Arnold said.

Pashur, the tattoo artist from Pashur Creative, said the tattoos are supposed to last up to seven days if they're in all black and three days if they're in color. Pashur, who owns the design company based in Nashville, Tenn., said he has an agent who contracts him to go out to colleges and special events.

"Besides doing special events, we do design, illustrations, photography and body painting for magazines, concerts and CD covers," he said. "With the tattoo designs, I can create nearly any color in the rainbow. Today, I have been giving tattoos on people's necks, legs, ankles, upper chest — almost any place that doesn't involve the removal of clothing."

Most of the caricature portraits captured just students' faces, and some portrayed their face with a cartoon-type body. Others had an added extra touch from the artist.

"Today I had a guy that I just had to draw horns on because he was heckling me too much. The crowd loved it, and he didn't seem to mind too much," independent artist Laurie Daven said.

Completion of field still under way

By MIKE VIETTI

KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

Steel, concrete, sod, support beams, dirt — all things that normally don't bring a person to tears.

Try walking in K-State baseball head coach Mike Clark's shoes for a while — tears at the sight of a seemingly endless, ongoing, long-overdue construction project on the new Frank Myers Field, still $280,000 short on funds, then would seem appropriate.

Not tears of sadness, but tears of joy and relief.

The new Frank Myers Field is steadily taking the shape of a quality Division I baseball facility — something Clark never has had during his 13-plus year tenure as head coach. A new concrete grandstand is nearing completion, with the pre-cast concrete for the players' locker room, weight room, team room and coaches' offices just having been installed. Athletic Director Max Urlick said the grandstand, the locker rooms and the team room should be completed by May.

The process of constructing the "new Frank," as it is called, hasn't gone as smoothly as possible. Not being able to raise the $4 million price tag for the new Frank through donations forced the athletic department to use tools called "gifts in kind," which essentially are donations of materials or services from businesses or people.

The obvious problem with extensively using gifts in kind is that the athletic department is at the mercy of the donors, Urlick said.

"When you do this, say the person that's giving you cinder block — because it's free, you have to wait until they have a production break to where they can deliver and produce that cinder block for you," Urlick said.

"While that stretches the project out, you're able to get the quality that you want in the first place, and while there's a short-term inconvenience, the long-term benefits are greater."

To finish the stadium, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics might have come to the end of the road as far as receiving gifts in kind.

"In this case, I think we've exhausted all the gifts in kind," director of development Ernie Barrett said. "To finalize things, I think we need cash dollars."

During Clark's stay as head coach, his teams have enjoyed facilities on par with an average high school team. So even

Benefit circus in town for 1 show

By NICK BRATKOVIC

KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

Weber Hall, a place known for its farm animals and livestock, will be inhabited by the circus tonight.

The Habid Circus Royale, sponsored by the Isis Shrine Temple is in town tonight for one show only. The circus features about 15 acts and is billed by circus ringmaster Peter Sturgis as family entertainment.

Advanced tickets to the event can be purchased at Dillon Stores for $7 for adults and $3.50 for kids. Tickets are $8 for adults and $4 for kids at the door.

"It is family entertainment. Nobody has ever had to censor a circus," Sturgis said.

The circus benefits the Shrine Temple, which has 22 orthopedic and burn hospitals around the country. The hospitals provide free care to those younger than 18 who have been burned or have other injuries.

"They take them in and do the surgeries or care absolutely free," said Jim Habid, a fourth-generation circus owner. "We help them raise the funds."

While the circus is contracted to help them raise funds, Sturgis said it is the Shriners who do all the work.

"The Shriners are not here three or four days a year. They are here year-round, sponsoring soccer teams and other fund-raising activities," Sturgis said. "The Shriners is one of the largest philanthropies in the world."

Sturgis and his crew spend around 30 weeks a year on the road. The circus has been in Hays, Kan., and this weekend will be Windy conditions fan burn out of control; smoke temporarily closes U.S. Highway 77

By MIKE SHEPHERD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

A sudden change in wind direction Wednesday afternoon caused a controlled burn to go out of control, causing a main Riley County highway to be temporarily closed.

Smoke from the burn, which was set about 1 p.m., temporarily closed a section of U.S. Highway 77 about three miles west of Riley, Kan., around 5 p.m. Riley County assistant fire chief Doug Messer said the fire jumped the highway twice, but was put out before it spread to neighboring farms.

"When they started this, they had a southwest wind, which is what you need right next to the highway like this," Messer said.

Officials confirmed that the fire was an accident.

"The wind just picked it up and kicked it back the other direction," Riley's assistant fire chief Ray Miller said.

Wind often plays a role in the burns, Messer said.

"Normally, you'd like to burn in 10-15 mph wind," he said. "You need a little wind to get a good burn."

Messer said the wind was blowing at 14 mph when the burn was started, but was gusting in excess of 20-25 mph at the time it went out of control.

Because of that, the range-land fire index issued a burn warning, during which burning is allowed only for agricultural purposes, Messer said.

"I knew when I got up this morning and saw the forecast I knew I'd be out tonight," he said.

Land owner Alan Nelson and his crew knew they were in trouble about 5 p.m., neighbor Gary Jenkins said. That's when they came to his door asking for some water.

"I came down when I seen them in trouble," he said after stepping down off of his tractor. "The wind came up on them hard."

The land is out of production as part of the Conservation Reserve Program, in which basically, "the government pays them not to farm it,"

Messer said.

Nelson's 16-year-old son, Mike, helped control the southern edge of the burn. He said they had been burning their fields for the past three days without incident.

"The wind just changed on us," he said, covered in black ash from riding in the burned field.

Mid-April is field-burning season, Messer said, as farmers are trying to get rid of unwanted weeds and brush that might interfere with cattle grazing.

He said his department gets between 300 and 350 calls a year, this time of year being the busiest.

"I would say a third of what we do are active grass fires and half of those are during the burn season," he said.

That's something Jenkins is familiar with.

"You think you're all right, then all of a sudden you're not," he said. "You can get in big trouble in a hurry."

Messer said there were no injuries or property damage as a result of the incident.

MIKE SHEPHERD/COLLEGLIAN

Mike Nelson, 16, rides a four-wheeler along the southern edge of his father's farm to water any hot spots that remained after a field fire Wednesday afternoon. The controlled burn went out of control, closing U.S. Highway 77 for a short time after the wind unexpectedly changed directions, fire officials said.

Union emits unusual odor; exact origin still unknown

Visitors to the K-State Student Union might have noticed an odd smell Wednesday afternoon.

The exact origin of the odor is unknown, but could have been produced by construction, said Steve Kesi, project superintendent for the Union's renovations.

"We had some sweating of copper plumbing lines," Kesi said. "We were also laying floor tile, but I don't think that would have caused it."

Kesi said he had been at work in the building the entire day and had not noticed any strange odors or fielded complaints from Union patrons.

"If there was something wrong, they would have told me about it," he said.

Jury cannot decide whether woman tried to kill officers

SALINA, Kan. — A woman accused of trying to kill two police officers was released after a jury could not determine whether she actually meant to harm the officers or only was trying to kill herself.

Lisa Graham, 44, was arrested at her home Sept. 30 after launching a barrage of Roman candles at officers Russ Lamer and John Krenowicz and firing a shot from a handgun into the ceiling during a scuffle with Lamer.

Jurors who heard the case against her deliberated for about five hours Monday but could not reach a verdict. Judge Daniel Hebert allowed Graham to be released on her own recognizance, with instructions to maintain contact with her probation officer. She is on probation for an earlier case involving an altercation with her sister.

Defense attorney Mitch Christians argued that Graham wanted to scare the officers into leaving so she could kill herself. The officers came to her home after a report that the occupant was contemplating suicide.

Graham had pinned a suicide note to her back that said funeral arrangements had been made and that she wanted to donate her kidneys.

After trying to reach her by phone for 30 minutes, the officers got into the house through an unlocked bedroom window and found themselves on what they said was gasoline-soaked carpet.

Assistant Saline County Attorney Tom Stanton argued that Graham left only the bedroom window unlocked in order to trap the officers in that room.

Stanton also said Graham needed just one bullet to kill herself, yet the .38-caliber revolver she carried was loaded and she had three extra bullets in her pocket.

Bus driver killed in wreck; 4 students suffer injuries

WICHITA — A school bus driver was killed Wednesday when her bus collided with the back of a plumbing truck stopped on Interstate 135 and a piece of pipe from the truck crashed through the window of the bus, apparently hitting her in the head.

Four students, ages 6 to 10, had injuries when the bus veered into a highway guardrail after the collision. A sports utility vehicle and van stopped in front of the plumbing truck also were involved in the chain-reaction accident, Kansas Highway Patrol Lt. Phil Bostian said.

Nine children were on the bus. Four were taken to the hospital with minor bumps and bruises, along with two of their siblings. Three unhurt children were taken to school. The driver of another vehicle was treated at the scene.

Among the students taken to Wesley Medical Center was 6-year-old Danielle Clark, who was seated in the middle of the bus. The girl, who was wearing a seat belt, said she bumped her head but that it did not hurt much.

After the accident, she ran to the front of the bus to get her coat and saw the school bus driver.

"I saw a little bit of blood," Danielle told reporters at Wesley Medical Center as her mother looked on.

Ralph Teran, a spokesman for Wichita Public Schools, said the children were unaware their bus driver was dead until they were told at the hospital.

"The kids are holding up real well, but it is hard," Teran said.

Wichita school spokeswoman Janelle Albertson said the bus was taking the students to the Toussaint L'Ouverture elementary school.

Investigators had not determined why the cars were stopped on the Interstate when the school bus rammed into them, setting off a four-vehicle chain reaction, Bostian said.

Increase in cost of all parking permits unnecessary

Parking Services should make students pay for what they get.

If this means charging more for prime parking spaces in the center of campus, so be it. However, increasing permit prices across the board is unfair.

Because K-State will — if all goes as planned — be adding a shuttle system next semester, parking permit prices are being hiked. This is unfair to the many students — such as residence hall students — who will be at the mercy of the new prices but never will set foot on one of the new shuttles.

A permit hike of $60 — while not final — has been considered. This would, theoretically, help fund the new shuttles. However, it only will succeed in scaring students away from buying a permit and making the shuttle system unnecessary.

If Parking Services is interested in urging students to park off campus, it simply should hike prices and watch permit sales dwindle.

However, if it is realistically hoping to launch a shuttle system, it should re-examine the cost increases. Charging exorbitant amounts will not aid in the implementation of the new shuttle system.

Other schools offer shuttle systems without charging an arm and a leg for parking.

The University of Kansas, for example, charges $156 for a yearlong student parking pass. This is more than the $120 K-State students pay now, but significantly less than they might be asked to pay next year.

At the University of Texas, commuter students pay only $78 for a yearlong pass. While this is incredibly cheap compared to K-State, it is important to note that, at Texas, resident students are charged $340 for a year's pass.

Finally, at Colorado State University, one of K-State's peer institutions, students must fork over only $60 per year to park on campus.

Obviously, this is only a small number of schools with which to contrast K-State. However, this small sampling does show what seems obvious to many at K-State.

Parking Services should use restraint when considering an increase in parking permit prices.

CALEB'S STORY

child endures abuse for years until adoptive parents bring hope

Caleb's father prepped the windows as he prepared to paint the hallway. He pulled the tape apart and snapped it at the base of the roll. Immediately, he saw his son huddle in the corner, covering his mouth with his hands. "I'll be quiet," he said. "I promise I won't make a noise."

The adoptive father's eyes welled with tears. What possibly could have happened in the boy's short past that would cause such a response? Had someone taped his mouth closed when he was too noisy?

In the world of abuse, a child is voiceless. In the face of danger, a child can only suffer.

When I met Caleb, I was struck by his wild youthfulness. This 6-year-old boy bounced from sofa to chair, talking to everyone he could. When his father told me of his past, I was horrified and thankful.

Caleb and his biological sister, Selah, were taken from their mother at 2 and 3 years of age due to neglect.

Selah was put into foster care. Before she reached her final home with her adoptive parents, Selah was transferred to four different homes.

Caleb wasn't as fortunate.

He was taken from the home and placed into a group home for boys.

In Missouri, a state law requires children to be moved from group homes into foster homes after three months. Caleb stayed in the group home for three years.

During his stay at the group home, Caleb was repeatedly physically, emotionally and verbally abused. However, something more horrific faced him before he would be taken out of the damaging situation.

At three years old, Caleb was sexually abused by the older boys in the home and by the social worker in charge of overseeing the home.

The social worker was a friend of the person in charge of appointing staff and was never evaluated on his performance.

Caleb finally was removed from the home when his adoptive parents heard about his situation. They also learned of Selah and decided they had room in their home for two more children.

Although Caleb was saved, it was too late. Both he and Selah were diagnosed with post traumatic stress disorder. The children currently live with their adoptive parents, and the adoption will be final in less than four weeks.

The road has been hard for Caleb. Countless nights he was awakened by nightmares. Sounds and objects reminded him of the horror he lived. Rage welled up within him, and he would urinate on the carpet out of anger and hurt.

Now in kindergarten, Caleb has been suspended from school more than five times this year.

ADAM HAYES/Collegian

Life has been hard for Caleb, and it looks as if it will continue to be.

But there is hope.

His parents say he is more sensitive than before. They live more than four days without an angry outburst.

Caleb gives hugs. When he does hurt someone, he asks if they are OK before he runs off to play.

The story of Caleb is hard to read without feeling sorry for him and angry at the injustice he lived through.

In St. Louis alone, there are 5,000 children just like him. They need love and a home, instead of abuse and neglect.

Who will stand up for the children? Will it be you?

Amending Constitution to ban flag burning ignorant

"Better a thousandfold abuse of free speech than denial of free speech. The abuse dies in a day, but the denial slays the life of the people, and entombs the hope of the race."

— Charles Bradlaugh (1890); English reformer

Last week, the U.S. Senate killed House-approved legislation that would have led toward amending the Constitution to ban flag desecration.

In an act of the greatest anti-intellectualism, appealing solely to the viscera and not to the brain, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, proposed the following one-sentence amendment to the Constitution: "The Congress shall have the power to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag of the United States." The proposal failed four votes shy of the needed two-thirds majority.

This nearly biennial ritual (this was Congress' third attempt to pass this amendment since 1995) began in 1984. During a demonstration against nuclear war and the GOP outside the Republican National Convention in Dallas, a group of protesters — including Gregory Lee Johnson — took a flag from a bank building and set it ablaze.

Johnson was convicted of violating a Texas state law that prohibits defacing or damaging the flag. To distinguish between federally sanctioned flag burning as a respectful way of disposing of old flags and flag burning as a form of protest, the Texas law stipulated that the prohibited form of flag-burning is an act in which the perpetrator knows will "seriously offend," (i.e., the act itself is not bad, only the intention). Two undercover police officers at the protest testified that Johnson offended them.

Five years later, the Supreme Court overturned Johnson's conviction, ruling burning the flag is a protected form of free speech.

The only option left to ban flag desecration is to amend the Constitution.

Four arguments are made for such an amendment.

1) The flag is a venerated object. Just as it is illegal to desecrate other venerated national objects (e.g. the Lincoln Memorial, the Liberty Bell, original copies of the Declaration of Independence), it should be equally illegal to desecrate the national flag.

2) Desecrating the flag is equivalent to "fighting words." Flag burning evokes such passions in onlookers that it might incite some into fistfuffs and possibly riots.

3) As Hatch argues, "[The flag is] not just a piece of cloth or a symbol. It is the embodiment of our heritage, our liberties and indeed our sovereignty as a nation."

4) Many of our countrymen fought, sacrificed, endured great hardships and even died to protect our cherished liberties. Out of respect for veterans who are greatly offended by flag desecration, this act should be banned.

These reasons seriously are flawed.

First, most of venerated national objects are in limited supply. If one desecrates the original Star Spangled Banner, the flag that inspired Francis Scott Key to write his poem, what is desecrated is the sole Star Spangled Banner. If one desecrates any old American flag, there's about 10,000 others being made to replace it.

Second, "fighting word" laws are to prevent speech that incites people into violence who agree with the speech, not disagree. Should there be a law preventing Scott Roney, Jeff Elliott and me from expressing our views because it might incite someone to beat the tar out of us?

Third, the flag is just a symbol. It is the Constitution that is the embodiment of our heritage, our liberties and our sovereignty as a nation. The flag legally provides nothing.

And fourth, it's hypocritical for the same conservatives who are leading the cause against the "politics of feeling" to want to amend the Constitution in order to ban conduct that offends them. On one hand they're critical of black people who don't like the word "niggard" because it sounds too similar to the N-word, and they're critical of those who advocate not giving elementary school children letter grades because receiving a low grade might hurt some child's self-esteem. Yet on the other hand, they want to amend the Constitution because an act of flag-desecration might hurt some veteran's feelings. In addition, as stated by Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., "[Veterans] didn't die for the flag. They died for what the flag represents" (namely the republic and the Constitution).

Moreover, flag desecration is a form of free speech. Are we not taught that the greatness of the First Amendment is that it's not to protect speech with which we agree, but speech we hate? As Edwin Yoder wrote in The Washington Post, "... the power to communicate sometimes involves the power to shock" thus "it's the offensive free speech that usually needs judicial protection."

In the majority opinion for Texas vs. Johnson, Justice William Brennan wrote, "... the remedy to be applied [to disagreeable speech] is more speech, not enforced silence."

In addition, when was the last time anyone burned a flag? The Constitution is one of the greatest documents ever composed by man. It's the essence of what the United States is. Farting around with it for a non-problem is profane. To paraphrase Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., changing the Constitution over this issue would be an overreaction to conduct that does not present a constitutional crisis for our nation.

Most important of all, the fact that our nation tolerates flag burning is one of the things that makes this nation great. As stated in the majority opinion, tolerance of criticism "is a sign and source of our [national] strength." Brennan went on to write, "We do not consecrate the flag by punishing its desecration, for in doing so we dilute the freedom that this cherished emblem represents."

Nations that ban flag burning, such as China or Iraq, do so because their governments are ideologically weak. Flag burning in countries in which such an act is a crime poses an actual threat to the status quo. Are we equally so insecure in our national self-identity that if someone burns the flag, the country will collapse into a puddle of our own tears and deteriorate into anarchy?

The real offense here is that our elected officials bring this up in every congressional session for the sole reason of scoring political points (Have you noticed that this is an election year?). Playing this political game is not only small, but also a disgrace to the Constitution, the nation, the veterans and the very flag that the amendment is to protect.

Scott Roney, what purpose did your urban-awakening column serve, really?

Bib overalls, straw hats and Wabash Cannonball — they all go together.

How am I supposed to teach in geology class in Thompson Hall if they're doing construction?

Hey, Parking Services: you can have my money, but you can't have my soul.

I wonder if the Royals will make the playoffs this year.

I would just like to say that Beasley's first-year statistics were way better than Bishop's first-year statistics.

I was going to call and defend the baseball team, but they have the same record as the basketball team had, so I guess I won't.

Jeff Cooper: nice try. But it's time to take some lessons from the master — Ms. Glasscock.

You could have just stayed in St. Louis.

Reed, really, I'm sure you could go some place better than Lawrence. Try Scott City, Kansas.

To the beautiful woman in the orange sweater who smiled at me outside of Cardwell Hall: thank you.

I'm sitting here looking at the Student Senate initiatives on the front page of the Collegian and, once again, it proves SGA is utterly worthless.

Leave it to the Derb to screw up orange juice.

Can we all try being a little more positive in the Campus Fourum?

If there is no God, then what is life worth living for?

It sure is good Jeff Elliott is going into accounting, because he sure falls short of the mark when it comes to good journalism.

How can the Collegian rag on Senate for being mediocre when it is obvious that more than half of the Collegian writers are far less than mediocre?

I'm going to miss Jason Heinrich like I'm going to miss Tom Asbury. And having crabs.

You can count more groundskeepers than fans at baseball games.

I'd like to cancel my subscription to the Collegian. There are not enough articles about religion in there.

SGA meets most goals? Yeah, right. And Asbury was a good coach, too.

I think sex is going to be cheaper than parking permits this year.

America must take action against police brutality

Editor,

On Feb. 4, 1999, on the Soundview section of the Bronx, African immigrant Amadou Diallo was returning home just after midnight when he was stopped by four white policemen. Officers Sean Carroll, Kenneth Boss, Richard Murphy and Edward McMellon — all part of a city elite street-crime unit — said they were out looking for a possible rape suspect whom they were told was a black male. Witnesses for the case saw and heard things, but only from a distance. The only close-up testimonies were from the four officers.

"The individual turned and looked at us," Carroll said. "His hand was still on the doorknob, and he starts removing a black object from his right side. As he pulled the object, all I could see was a top side — it looked like the side of a black gun. Believing that he ... was about to fire the gun at my partner, I fired my weapon."

All four officers present at the scene fired a combined 41 bullets at Diallo, 19 of which hit him.

The young African's body slumped against his apartment door as officer Carroll, who fired 16 shots, discovered the object they thought was a gun was really a wallet. Diallo, 22, died that night from the wounds, including bullet holes in the soles of his feet.

Moved to an Albany, N.Y. courtroom to try for a fair trial, prosecutors brought six alternative charges against the officers. After much deliberation, the four officers were acquitted of all charges, including two counts of murder, two counts of manslaughter, homicide and reckless endangerment.

What does this have to do with minority students attending institutions of higher learning? Plenty. Minorities across the United States rapidly are becoming victims of police brutality. All too often black and Hispanic men are seen as suspicious and are gunned down by police forces because they were thought to have been pulling out weapons.

We have come to a pathetic but necessary level that all people must begin policing the police. Outside of our world here at K-State there is a war of police brutality on minorities. We must find ways to voice our opinions about it. This is an American problem.

Students should take part in supporting Hale Library

Editor,

As a junior in international marketing and business, I am not a frequent user of Hale Library. Every once in a while I will go there to do research or study, but I do not spend a significant amount of time there. Even though I personally do not depend on the library for my studies, I realize many students do. These students who depend on Hale for research materials often have problems finding them within the library. This is due to a shortage of funds for journals, books and databases.

To find the best way to increase funds for the library a student/faculty task force was created. According to the Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock, the task force decided there were three ways to raise funds for Hale.

These included an increase in funding from the state, raising money through the KSU Foundation and adding a $2 per-credit-hour student fee. The first two ways do not affect most students, but the last way does.

Last year the $2 per-credit-hour student fee failed to pass Student Senate. Now Senate is being asked to pass a $1 per-credit-hour student fee. If a $1 fee is passed, it still will not compare to other Big 12 schools. For example, Texas A&M has a $5 per-credit-hour student library fee, according to the Texas A&M home page. Based on a 15-credit-hour semester, this generates about $3.2 million.

Another part of Texas A&M's student library fee is that it increases by 30 cents each year. This equals an estimated $200,000 increase each year. Texas A&M has twice as many students enrolled, but it also requires a higher student library fee. If a $1 per-credit-hour student library fee is passed at K-State, it would only generate $323,145.

The student fee at K-State only would be a drop in the bucket compared to the $3.4 million yearly budget for books, journals and databases for Hale as stated by Hobrock.

Most of the funding would come from the state and donations through the Foundation. As a student, I find it a little embarrassing to know that I do not help pay for the journals, books or databases that I use for research. I think it is about time we take responsibility as students and help support all fundraising activities presented by the student/faculty library fund-raising task force.

Reader questions thought process, facts in column

Editor,

We as human beings constantly are looking for some truth we can rely upon.

While our marketplace of ideas allows for new presentations all the time, we also end up hearing a lot of crappy ideas. Thus, we as human beings must constantly sift the crappy "truths" from the truths we like. I say that because truth is relative.

For example, is Jeff Elliott's head half full or half empty? Elliott has some grains of truth in his world, but when he presents these ideas with faulty analysis, he needs a smack down.

First of all, Elliott notes that the Pilgrims were great because they incorporated faith into specific, high-profile documents. But to Bible thump? Let's get something straight. The Pilgrims came over here because they practically were exiled by England's predominant Christian religion of their time. When they arrived, they allowed for many types of God-fearing religions (including their own) because they knew what it felt like to be criticized for held truths.

If Elliott really were to appreciate the Pilgrims, he would not romanticize them but rather see them as the exiles they were, and ultimately learn from their example: You can't force your views on others or exclude others for their views.

If Elliott really would pick up on this, he would stop criticizing other people who don't believe exactly what he believes. Plus, is Elliott forgetting that some Pilgrims didn't believe in God? Not all Pilgrims were Bible thumpers, either.

Just because you don't force your views on others doesn't mean you don't have faith, and just because you write columns about things besides religion doesn't mean you're not a good person. Prove it, Elliott. Prove it to us that your vile reputation is unfounded.

Elliott continues the column to note that God has been removed from the classroom, only allowing aesthetic philosophy to replace it. I think that if we are to relate these distinctly separate laws and sociological events, it's better to say that our society is just more accepting of different ideas, not resistant of some religions. Is school truly atheist? Sure, according to policy it is, but sociologically, it isn't.

Ironically, the Supreme Court (in an effort to be more accepting of different ideas) has ruled that children can have Bible studies on school grounds. Plus, these children are allowed to reach their religious view-points without the classroom making the effect of this independent decision even stronger.

Elliott notes in his conclusion, "Things were much simpler back then, back when we could truly think." Think about what? God or survival? There was no MTV or Stephen Hawking, but that doesn't mean life was simpler or easier. Elliott should know better than to put the Pilgrims on a pedestal, and when we note that Pilgrims thought a lot about God, it's because many had no option.

I suggest, Elliott, that you take Colonial America (look it up in the line schedule — that is, if you read much past the Bible) and get your supporting facts straight. You'd be so much more believable — and much less irritating — as a columnist.

After 27 years, K-State shows KU the LONG ROAD TO VICTORY

PHOTOS AND STORIES BY JUSTIN HAYWORTH

K-State defeated Kansas in tennis Wednesday for the first time in 27 years. But to head coach Steve Bietau, it was just another match in a seven-game winning streak.

The K-State tennis team defeated KU 5-4 at the Washburn Tennis Facility.

Petra Sedlmajerova got the Wildcats' first points of the day by defeating KU's Brooke Chiller in the No. 1 singles match 6-1, 6-1. After the win, K-State dropped its No. 3 and 6 singles matches, leaving the team behind 3-1.

"We were down all day," Bietau said. "We were down 3-1 during singles. Although I felt confident, it just seemed like we were fighting back all day."

The Wildcats stormed back in the

No. 2 and 5 singles matches, winning both. Alena Jecminkova defeated Cheryl Mallaiah 7-6 (5), 6-3 in the No. 2 singles match to pull the cats to back within one. Next, Kathy Chuda defeated Christi Wagenaar 7-6 (2), 6-2 in the No. 5 singles, tying the match at 3 heading into the doubles matches.

The singles matches weren't much different from what Bietau said he expected, and he said he went into the doubles matches knowing that his doubles teams had pulled out some tough victories this season.

The Cats dropped the No. 3 doubles match first as Chuda and Natalia Farmer fell from a 6-3 advantage to lose to Monica Sekulov and Wagenaar 8-6.

This made the score for the match 4-3 in the Jayhawks' advantage. To win

Alena Jecminkova stretches to return a shot during her singles match Wednesday afternoon at the Washburn Tennis Facility. Jecminkova won her singles match and the doubles match she played to help the Wildcats defeat the Kansas Jayhawks 5-4.

the match, K-State got wins in both of the remaining double matches.

Anna Pampoulova and Jecminkova pulled out a close victory at No. 2 doubles 8-4, bringing the overall victory down to the No. 1 doubles match.

Sedlmajerova and Eva Novotna battled with KU's No. 1 doubles team before finally emerging victorious at 9-7, giving the Wildcats the match with a final score of 5-4.

"The doubles match was a really good comeback," Bietau said. "If they don't win, we lose the match."

The win moves the Wildcats' record to 6-0 in the Big 12 Conference, heading into this weekend's play against Oklahoma at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Washburn Tennis Facility.

"Every time you win a hard match, I think it helps your confidence," Bietau said. "When it's this close and you win four in a row, logic tells you it's not an accident."

No. 1 doubles team comes from behind to hand KU loss

After three years of losing to KU in tennis, Eva Novotna finally got the opportunity to walk off the court victorious after a Wednesday match at the Washburn Tennis Facility.

The match's score was tied at 4 after K-State went 1-1 in the first two doubles matches. To win the match, K-State needed its No. 1 doubles team of Novotna and Petra Sedlmajerova to pull off a come-from-behind win. A win would give K-State its six consecutive Big 12 Conference win and keep it undefeated for the spring.

"It was a challenge for me and Petra to beat KU," Novotna said. "This is my third season, and we've never beaten Kansas."

They fell behind and were looking to dig out of a 2-1 hole early in the match. Before long, they were staring at a 5-2 deficit with the game on the line. Novotna and Sedlmajerova started to discuss different strategies on how to get back into the match.

"Usually, we like to mix it up," Novotna said. "We like to play back a little and come in a little and keep it different. But with the wind, that didn't work today. The wind was such a big factor we had to come to the net more often and be more aggressive to come back, and we did."

Head coach Steve Bietau said he had no real doubts about the team members he had on the court with the game on the line.

"They dug out of a huge hole and reversed the momentum," Bietau said. "They've done it before, against Baylor, so I knew they had it in them to do it again."

They tied the match at 7-7 before sealing the game and overall victory by winning the final two games, giving them a 9-7 win.

"These players wanted to win this match, and I think that was pretty evident," Bietau said.

Eva Novotna and Petra Sedlmajerova celebrate their 9-7 come-from-behind victory in their No. 1 doubles match against Kansas on Wednesday afternoon at the Washburn Tennis Facility. The duo came back from a 5-2 deficit in the deciding match to give the Wildcats their first victory over Kansas since 1973.

Michigan State's return to national championship rekindles 'magic'

Well, it wasn't a typical NCAA championship game.

It wasn't a matchup of two No. 1 seeds, and it wasn't a close game that went down to the wire.

But for some reason, it was a nice change for college basketball fans. We got to watch Michigan State, a program that hasn't had a dominating presence in the postseason since the late 1970s, suddenly flourish.

Everyone remembers the 1979 championship game between the Spartans and Indiana State — the one that hooked the nation on the NCAA tournament.

It was the infamous "Magic vs. Bird" matchup that changed the entire landscape of college basketball.

Granted, Michigan State doesn't nearly have the tradition or exposure of a Duke or North Carolina (yet), but the Spartans are no obsolete program.

The 1979 final was the highest-rated telecast of an NCAA basketball game in history. Quite impressive.

Now, after 21 years without a title, Michigan State again reigns at the top of the college basketball world. Believe me, its road to the NCAA title fit perfect championship form.

I doubt head coach Tom Izzo had any complaints. The Spartans won all six games in the tournament by at least 11 points and closed out the 1999-2000 season with 11 straight victories.

Michigan State became the first Big Ten team to win it all since Michigan in 1989, halting a 10-year conference drought.

In this year's championship final, Magic Johnson was there, this time in the stands, as he watched his alma mater roll to a 89-76 victory over Florida.

This year, it was point guard Mateen Cleaves that provided the "magic" for the Spartans.

The senior helped Michigan State build a 43-32 halftime lead with 13 points and a perfect 3-for-3 from three-point range in the first 20 minutes of play.

Then, after rolling his ankle at the 16:18 mark of the second half, Cleaves was left to watch helplessly on the sidelines for the next 4 minutes and 29 seconds.

But he wouldn't be counted out — not a player of his caliber. He's been accustomed to his role as the emotional leader on the team the entire season, and Monday's game proved no different.

The senior stormed back. His long pass to teammate Morris Peterson etched the lead to 60-50. Later, he would sacrifice his body, setting a screen to spring A.J. Granger for a three-pointer.

That shot would be the start of a 16-6 run for Michigan State, putting the game well out of reach as the Spartans took a commanding 84-66 lead.

Cleaves finished with 18 points and four assists, while Peterson and Granger added 21 and 19, respectively.

However, despite his performance on paper, it was even more amazing to watch Cleaves and the effect on the team he had through his words and actions.

You just don't see that kind of thing too often in college basketball anymore. That missing link is what separates us from experiencing the epitome of the sport.

Without "magic" and emotion, what is college basketball?

Unfortunately, that "magic" isn't always visible. Looking back to 1979, we know it's in Spartan blood — blood that had laid dormant for the past 21 years. Now it's resurfacing, stronger than ever.

Do I think it will take Michigan State another two decades to reach championship status again? Absolutely not.

In my opinion, look for the Spartans to be strong tournament contenders for a while. It was no coincidence the way they rolled through this season's bracket, and you can expect similar performances in the future.

Although Cleaves won't be there any longer, he has left his mark on the program.

Spartan recruiting should hit an all-time high as two consecutive Final Four appearances and a championship will serve as appealing credentials to high school phenoms across the nation.

With some luck, maybe Michigan State will strike gold again and land another Magic or Mateen, another emotional superstar to capture the hearts of the college basketball world.

Or at least we can hope.

Catcher looks past disability to win games

■ Due to partial deafness, player relies on lip-reading to remain on top of game.

BY SAM STIERS

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is an old baseball adage that if a catcher turns around and looks at the umpire, he's trying to show him up. K-State catcher Graham McAllister turns around after every pitch, but he's not trying to upstage the umpire. He's just looking to get the pitch count.

McAllister was born partially deaf. He only has limited hearing in his left ear and wears a hearing aid, but most of his understanding comes through lip-reading. McAllister, however, doesn't call it a handicap and hasn't let it hinder his ability to play the game he loves.

"I haven't used that at all as an excuse," McAllister said. "But, there are situations where I struggle with it, and communicating with my teammates is tough sometimes. Other than that, it hasn't bothered me at all."

Although McAllister says it isn't a handicap, K-State head coach Mike Clark says that McAllister must overcome things most players take for granted.

"For a lot of people, he should be an inspiration, overcoming the hearing part of it," Clark said. "You don't understand how important that is until you see a pop-up go up around home plate, or communicating cutoffs, pick-offs and stuff like that."

Mike Hensley, K-State's recruiting coordinator, said McAllister's hearing was something he took a look at when he first was recruiting him, but he said it has not been a factor.

"He's so aware of the game, that unless you know it you wouldn't know he has a disability," Hensley said.

McAllister's teammates said it never has been a problem, and Clark said he agrees. He said McAllister uses his other senses to compensate for his lack of hearing.

"I don't even look at it like a handicap, because of the way he's approached it and handled it," Clark said.

McAllister is a junior this year and said he has been playing baseball for as long as he can remember. He grew up in a baseball family; his grandfather was drafted by the Red Sox, and his uncle, Steve McAllister, played for the Houston Astros and the Pittsburgh Pirates.

"I was basically raised by baseball, and it's what I've always wanted to do," McAllister said.

Baseball wasn't the only venue McAllister had to showcase his athletic talent in high school. He went to high school in Lyon, Kan., and lettered in baseball as well as in football, basketball and golf.

After high school, McAllister went to Seminole State Junior College, in Seminole, Okla. He became the team's starting center fielder his sophomore year, and said the experience was one of the best in his life.

"I truly learned everything about the game. I became a much better player," McAllister said. "I learned to catch and the way the game is played."

McAllister said he came to K-State for the competition the Big 12 Conference offered. Clark and Hensley both said they recruited him for his athleticism and versatility.

"Graham is possibly one of our best athletes, if not our best athlete," Clark said. "He is very versatile and can play any position on the field."

He spent most of last fall playing shortstop and has started three games at shortstop this spring. It is McAllister's athleticism that has led him back to being a catcher.

"He's done such a good job throwing and blocking that we've moved him to catcher and he's done a good job there," Clark said.

McAllister is solid behind the plate. He only has committed five errors on the season and has shown a strong throwing arm.

"He pretty well shuts down the running game," Hensley said. "And he plays so well behind the plate he gives our pitchers confidence to throw their off-speed stuff."

McAllister has allowed 11 passed balls this year. Clark said it is a concern, but he said that McAllister is continuing to improve and he is handling a sometimes wild pitching staff.

K-State's pitching staff appreciates McAllister's hard work behind the plate.

"I think he does a good job of blocking the plate and selecting pitches," Luke Robertson, K-State sophomore pitcher said. "I have total confidence in him. He's one of the best catchers I've ever thrown to."

McAllister calls the pitches during games, and it is something he takes pride in. Clark said he has confidence in McAllister's ability to handle the pitching staff and call pitches.

"He calls a good ballgame," Clark said. "He's got a lot of baseball savvy, he knows the game and he knows when to throw what and what's working for a pitcher. Our pitchers like to throw to him."

Offensively, McAllister is having a good year. He is batting .292 and has a .403 on-base percentage, courtesy of a team high seven hit by pitches. He only has one home run, but is a crafty base stealer, swiping four bases on four attempts.

Golfer shoots record-setting 62

BY NICK BRATKOVIC

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was a record-setting day at the Manhattan Country Club for Brian Walker, a former K-State golfer.

Walker shot a club-low 62 on the day, which included two a 30 on the front nine and a 32 on the back. He said he was aware of the record as he approached the 18th tee but wasn't really concerned.

"No, I wasn't nervous on the 18th hole. You either do it or you don't," Walker said. "I birdied the par four."

Jeff Luebke, a pro shop worker, said Walker broke the record of 63 held by former K-State golf coach Mark Elliot.

"He shot that back in 1994 and was the old K-State golf coach," Luebke said.

It was the latest step in Walker's career, which will take him to the Prairie Tour on Monday.

He said he will be on tour for 2 1/2 months and was taking this week off to prepare. His first tournament Monday will take place in Tulsa, Okla.

BAKINGbrilliance

STORY BY SHANNON DELMEZ

Students refine skills, gain experience at American Institute of Baking

Students who graduate from K-State with a degree in bakery science and management and then continue their education at the American Institute of Baking literally have the best of both worlds.

Elizabeth Russell, a K-State graduate who now attends the baking institute, said the two programs compliment one another.

"The practical experience that I get from AIB and the knowledge that I get from K-State goes hand-in-hand," she said. "I've got a one-up on most of the students that are there because I have come from K-State."

Marvin Willyard, K-State instructor of grain science, said the two programs are different, but each offers students interested in bakery science a valuable part of their education.

"The focus of Kansas State's program is primarily on the science of baking. We do have a baking science laboratory, but the equipment that we have is somewhat limited," Willyard said. "The student who also attends AIB has the opportunity to use the equipment that AIB has, which is much more extensive than what we have at Kansas State. Some of our students do elect to go to both programs because AIB's focus is more on actual hands-on experience of working in a large commercial bakery. Our focus is more on a formal education — math, science, communication — as well as the strong bakery science background."

The benefits students receive from the two programs also are different, said Ken Embers, director of admission at the baking institute.

"You get the good background of a four-year degree at Kansas State," Embers said. "From us, you get a lot of practical, functional, operational information. You get the shop time and your instructors are former industry personnel. So, in the combination of the two, you get the academic side and the practical application side."

There also are other benefits of attending both schools. The baking institute gives K-State graduates of bakery science or food science a $5,000 scholarship, which is full tuition, to study. This helps to make the transition between the two schools easy. Embers said there usually is between one and four graduates of K-State in every class of 55.

"We have one graduate of bakery science and management in this class, and we had four in the last class," he said.

The baking institute structures its classes different from K-State, Russell said.

"AIB is a lot more intense, not with the information, but we go to school from 8 to 5 Monday through Friday," she said. "We have lectures in the mornings and in the afternoons we have labs."

Students stay an extra semester after completing their K-State degree for the 16-week course offered by the institute.

Russell said she chose to attend both programs for the advantages she receives from both.

"I wanted the four-year degree from K-State and I knew that K-State was world-renowned for their bakery science and management and milling science and grain science," she said. "I was going for the college experience to have that four-year degree. I have a strong interest in math and science, so that's why I went ahead and pursued that degree. Every person going into the work force to associate with persons already in the work force."

The two programs work closely together, Embers said. They refer students to each other depending on the needs of each individual.

"It's a great way to refresh, get some new knowledge and to go back over the things I've had and also to see the different things that go on in the industry," Russell said.

"It's got a lot of practical knowledge. I haven't ever seen anything quite like the large-scale production that we are doing. That was kind of a pull for me."

Vegetarians have alternatives for protein intake

By ERIN SCHNEWEIS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

For vegetarians, beef is not what's for dinner.

When Renee Herpolsheimer, sophomore in kinesiology, was 12 years old, she made a decision that has affected her choice in foods. Due to her thoughts on animal rights, she decided to become a lacto-ovo vegetarian. This term for her category of vegetarians is in reference to her eating dairy and egg products, but avoiding products such as meat.

Herpolsheimer said there have been a variety of reactions when people find out about her eating lifestyle.

"A lot of people think it is weird. My uncle is a cattle farmer, so he makes jokes about it," Herpolsheimer said. "Some people think it is kind of cool."

Finding food that fits her beliefs is not hard to do when she goes out to eat. "It depends on how strict of a vegetarian you are, but for me it's not," Herpolsheimer said.

She said she does not take any dietary supplements to make up for the lack of meat protein in her diet.

"I think you can get all of the protein you need by getting the appropriate amino acids," she said.

Some vegetarians opt to take supplements.

At General Nutrition Center Inc. in the Manhattan Town Center there are supplement pillars, but none are designated specifically for vegetarians.

Andrew Geier, manager of the store, said he did not see the need for vegetarian supplements.

"I don't think their needs are all that different," he said.

Geier said he suggests vegetarians take protein-rich multivitamins such as "Everyone has some degree of difference in their interpretation of what a vegetarian is."

— Paul Stolle, director of Dining Services

soybean pills, which are the most popular.

He said soybeans are beneficial to people who are not vegetarians as well. For men in particular, it has been known to decrease the chance of prostate cancer.

"For those vegetarians who do drink milk, it is definitely a great source. Another supplement is peanut butter," Geier said.

Geier said he has not noticed an increase in people becoming vegetarians, nor any new products specifically designed for them.

Finding vegetarian food at the K-State Student Union should not be difficult, said Paul Stolle, director of Dining Services.

The Union offers a daily salad bar, a hot entree and soup specifically for vegetarians. Also found in the Union are smoothies, which have a high source of protein supplements, a variety of vegetables, vegetarian pizzas, rice and noodles.

Stolle said the Bluemont Room, on the second floor of the Union, offers a hot vegetable entree everyday.

"Everyone has some degree of difference in their interpretation of what a vegetarian is," Stolle said.

The Union offers more for vegetarians than they have in the past.

Stolle said vegetarians have options to help expand the items in the Union. There are questionnaires that have been distributed in the past to help create the menus, but another option is the comment cards.

Stolle said they respond to the comment cards as soon as possible.

"We encourage to hear from people who are vegetarians on where we can improve," he said.

STADIUM

though the completion of the new Frank has been pushed back from the beginning of the 1999 season to perhaps as long as the start of the 2002 season because of a lack of funds, Clark said he doesn't mind.

He's just happy to have a decent field.

"This is just going to be awesome, you just have to keep your eye on all the positive things going on around us," Clark said of the ongoing construction. "We will be delivered to the promised land sooner or later."

The wait hasn't been easy, though, especially for Clark.

"The players and coaches here have always gone the extra yard for me," Clark said. "I've always felt like, at times, I've let them down because I haven't been able to get them the basic things, like a locker room, that they deserved.

"To have that will mean, to me ... things are right — that we got it done. To have it done right — that means everything," Clark said.

Not cutting any corners, at least from any aspect of the stadium that directly involves the players, was a primary goal for Urlick, the coaching staff, President Jon Wefald, Barrett and Jeff Steele, assistant athletic director for events management.

Although the coaches' offices have shrunk in size from the original plans, Clark said he was pleased with the decisions that were made.

"I didn't make many decisions — Max, Dr. Wefald, Ernie — those guys made the right decisions," Clark said. "I'm really happy that they did. A lesser person, somebody that wasn't as committed would have said, 'Let's just get 'em the stadium and shut 'em up.'"

After being forced to play 45 of their 55 games outside of Manhattan last season, the Wildcats have played their home games in Manhattan this year and on a new, $600,000 surface that puts the old Frank and other fields to shame.

"We have not played on a better facility this year, as far as playing surface goes," Clark said.

Even though the outlook is fairly promising for the new stadium, Clark said he still regrets that the new Frank wasn't finished for last year's crop of seniors and won't be for this year's seniors.

"I want them to have the best that there is, and not having that locker room for the seniors — I get a little emotional about that," Clark said. "These guys will always have a big, big, big place in my heart because of the sacrifices they made — the 13 years of dressing in the parking lot. But I also want them to be proud of what we're going to have."

With the eventual placing of the final piece to the new Frank Myers Field will also come the removal of a large burden on Clark's back — one that's been residing there for nearly 14 years.

"It's gonna be emotional for me," Clark said. "I'm gonna feel good about finalizing with all the guys who have fought for me, who rose above the things that we had to go through together and still never made an excuse."

long journey, and in the future Acacia will not condone hazing in any way.

"Barb Robel pointed out the fact that all fraternities started with a spiritual foundation," Bassett said. "When hazing got into the culture isn't important. But the fact is, it got into our culture and it went against everything we stand for."

Bassett said he believes the task force has been successful in finding and discovering the causes and has worked hard to find the solutions.

To meet housing requirements at K-State, Bassett said they need to create a safe place for students to live.

"The foundation of the task force has been to create a safety net for students having trouble and a spiritual environment," Bassett said.

Goodpasture said the alumni have made an extraordinary commitment to reestablishing their chapter.

"Removing Acacia was the right thing to do last spring," Goodpasture said. "Supporting the repetition this spring is the right thing to do now."

in Salina, Kan.

Habid said they spend a lot of time traveling.

On Wednesday, Habid and the set-up crew came in, along with nine tigers, five baboons, a Russian bear act, jugglers, Spanish aerial rings and a single trapeze act.

"We can't have a regular flying trapeze act in here because the catwalk is too low," Habid said.

He said there are some obstacles that Weber Hall imposes because of the low ceiling and the dirt floor, but he still expects a great show. There will be aerial decorations and three rings of activity.

He said the circus works to bring in top-notch talent and animals.

"Every animal out here is the number one in the business. They said they wanted the best, and we went out and got them," Habid said. "People probably will not know our names, but they will know the Shrine hospital."

Lenkner chosen as chair

■ Diversity, communication, training to be Senate's goals.

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thirty-one was the magic number for Travis Lenkner, junior in print journalism and pre-law.

Lenkner was elected as the new Student Senate chair in a 31-25 vote at a Senate meeting Thursday night. He ran against Crystal Campbell, junior in chemical engineering, in a runoff election.

There are three issues Lenkner said he wanted to address. He said he wanted to increase and foster diversity, educate and train senators and increase communication within Student Senate and with the student body.

"It's been great to hear that diversity has been a part of everyone's speech," he said.

Lenkner said Senate received the message that the student body wants more diversity.

"Now, it's like, finally, there's momentum," he said, referring to the fact that the new Senate is the most diverse he's ever seen.

Another concern Lenkner said he'll address is communication.

Oklahoman House backs creationism

By GINA KOHAKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Legislation passed Wednesday by the Oklahoma House of Representatives stated science books in the state's public schools would be required to recognize "that human life was created by one God of the universe."

The creationism issue was brought to attention of the House by an amendment pertaining to the State Textbook Committee. Last year, the committee mandated that biology books needed to have a disclaimer which described evolution as a "controversial theory."

Attorney General Drew Edmondson later decided that the committee could not reserve the right to require such disclaimers.

Despite Edmondson's action, the house also passed another amendment that allows the State Textbook Committee the "authority to insert a one-page summary, opinion or disclaimer into any textbook reviewed and authorized for use in the public schools of Oklahoma."

The bill will continue on to a joint House-Senate conference committee for review.

The original content of the bill was to change the format of the textbook committee to include two elementary-level teachers and two secondary-level teachers.

Oklahoma's amendment is in the wake of the last year's decision by the Kansas Board of Education to make the teaching of evolution an optional part of the curriculum for schools across the state.

"As a biologist, I don't agree with the evidence. What they are doing is religion, not science," said Gary Conrad, university distinguished professor of biology. "They are mandating the insertion of religion into science."

Certain schools in Kansas are maintaining the right to teach evolution to students.

The Auburn-Washburn School Board unanimously voted this week to follow the standards created by science educators instead of the ones chosen by the State Board of Education. These were the same standards that previously were rejected by the school board.

"I think it is an excellent decision," Rob Denell, professor of biology, said. "Anyone

Cia Verschelden, associate professor of sociology, reads with her two sons, Abe and John Denner. The inside of their house is predominantly yellow and white pine, something Verschelden said gives it a log-cabin feel. "I really like it because it feels so natural, almost like nature," she said.

Responsible living

Family lives in solar house as way to live within its means

This is the house that Dean built. To the right is the garden, the bat house and a barrel that collects rainwater. To the left is the hammock and the plum tree.

And nestled in the back is the blue and white house with huge bay windows and no air-conditioning or heater. But there is no need for it.

"Our heating system is the thermomuclear reactor that is 93 million miles away," Dean Denner, Manhattan resident, said.

Denner is the owner of a passive solar house on Colorado Street.

"It's different from the way most Americans do it. I don't think being comfortable is the most important thing," he said. "But we are comfortable. Putting on a sweater or taking off a shirt isn't that hard."

He built the house along with church and family volunteers in 1986 and made sure every detail would ensure them a comfortable living. There are nine-inch walls, so thick, in fact, that one Christmas they did not hear the carolers outside, Denner said. The cement floor was dyed and stamped with a design and later insulated underneath. There also are thick curtains, and vines grow around the windows and around the recycled plastic trellis to ensure shade in the summer.

There is more. This is the house that has a solar collector for hot water on the roof and a whole-house fan to cool the family off in the summer.

"Many people think it's incredible and unacceptable that we don't have air conditioning," Denner said. "It's not bizarre and weird. Living in a passive solar house is a very good thing to do. You don't have to make a big sacrifice to do something different."

But what about his family? Although his wife and four children said they love the house, their neighbors feel differently.

When Cia Verschelden, Denner's wife, became pregnant, neighbors invited her over to their air-conditioned house, Denner said.

Yet Verschelden declined the offer politely.

"I just think it's a responsible way to live on the Earth without using more than we need," she said.

The inside of their house is predominantly yellow and white pine, something that Verschelden said gives it a log cabin feel.

"I really like it because it feels so natural, almost like nature," she said.

However, both Denner and Verschelden have one misgiving about the house — the openness of it.

"When we built the house, we only had one child," she said. "There's a lot of people there now, and sometimes it's so open that you just wish you had a door to close."

Denner deals with this problem more often than his wife, an associate professor of sociology, who reads while she walks to work.

He used to work in construction but ABOVE: Patty McKenna, freshman in open-option and daughter of Cia Verschelden and Dean Denner, works in the organic garden outside her home. The house, built by Denner, is a passive solar house, complete with huge bay windows but without air-conditioning or a heater.

INSET: The Denners are keeping chicken eggs in an incubator that controls the temperature, humidity and insulation. The eggs must be kept at 99 degrees Fahrenheit and 50 percent humidity. It takes 21 days for chicken eggs to hatch.

Circus brings clowns, elephants, fun to town

By MIKE SHEPHERD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ziggy the Clown saw his opportunity as a line of cars on Claflin Road crawled to a stop Thursday evening near Weber Arena.

As a young woman rolled down her passenger window to say hello, Ziggy grabbed his deceptive, yellow point-and-shoot camera and ran over to her car.

"Let me take your picture," he pleaded to the lone female occupant.

As she smiled, Ziggy fired the shutter and a stream of water sprayed the woman in the face.

With a grin, she drove off and Ziggy headed back to the small group of children who'd gathered outside the arena for the circus.

That's where he met 2-year-old Tyler Herrman, who was attending his first circus.

Tyler wasn't sure what to make of Ziggy, whose face was covered in red and white. He was there to see the elephants.

The elephants, in addition to the tigers, baboons, clowns, a trapeze artist and other acts, were brought to K-State by the Hamid Circus Royale and the Isis Shrine Temple of Salina, Kan. The proceeds from the night are going back to the Shriners, who will in turn see that children with medical needs get free trips and care at hospitals across the country, said Doug Jolley, the Isis recorder.

"They get the best treatment and care at state-of-the-art facilities," he said. "And it's absolutely free to them."

Shriners members said they agreed that the circus, though its cause is serious, is a positive and fun experience.

"Everything here is positive," said Dave Johnson, K-State Police officer and Shriner.

Johnson said he's been a police officer for 26 years and a Shriner for 20.

Seattle Boeing union asks for Wichita representation

WICHITA — The union that waged a 40-day strike against Boeing Co. in Seattle asked Thursday for a vote to represent 4,000 additional workers at Boeing's plant in Wichita.

The Society of Professional Engineering Employees in Aerospace had gathered more than enough signatures to have the vote, said Jim Singletary, a contract administrator with the SPEEA.

SPEEA officials said they consider the union's recent 40-day holdout against Boeing in Seattle and the Puget Sound area a success, and that they believe that might have increased the desire of workers in Wichita to organize.

The Wichita workers did not go on strike, but accepted a similar contract this week.

The signatures were given to the National Labor Relations Board, which will verify them and schedule a vote in about six weeks. The union needed 1,200 signatures in order for the NLRB to authorize a vote.

The SPEEA represents about 1,300 workers at Wichita but is attempting to unionize a larger group of office and technical workers — programmers, planners, designers, general office workers, drafters and systems analysts.

Those workers had rejected the idea of joining a union in a vote taken in 1998, but the contract won by the SPEEA is seen as sparking new interest.

Wichita workers not represented by the SPEEA say they have seen their benefits cut while union members represented by the SPEEA and the Machinists have won contracts with better wages and benefits, said Hoyt Hillman, a chemist who is one of the organizers of the effort.

The company contends that the Seattle strike hurt both its operations and the workers, said Jeff Turner, vice president and general manager of commercial airplanes in Wichita.

Turner said the company recognizes the right of the union to organize additional workers but said the workers should have all the information they need to make an informed decision.

Seinfeld expecting child, friend Philbin announces

NEW YORK — Imagine Jerry Seinfeld inside his Long Island mansion, baby bottle in one hand, burp cloth in the other, musing: Whyyyyy do they call it a burp cloth?

That's right. First came love (1998), then came marriage (last December) — and now Seinfeld and bride, Jessica Sklar, soon will be pushing a baby carriage.

The big announcement was made Thursday by Seinfeld pal Regis Philbin on TV's "Live: With Regis and Kathie Lee."

"Yes. It's true. There will be a new little Seinfeld sometime this fall," Seinfeld's spokeswoman, Elizabeth Clarke, said.

It is the first child for both Sklar and Seinfeld, who made millions from a TV show that glorified single life and poked fun at commitment.

But that was then and this is now, and soon the 45-year-old Seinfeld will be up to his diaper bag in commitment.

Seinfeld apparently asked Philbin to serve up the news for him. Philbin did it gladly, informing viewers that the little Seinfeld is scheduled to arrive in October. Clarke did not want to pinpoint the due date.

The new arrival might have the undivided attention of his dad, who retired his series in 1998.

Baby Seinfeld also will have plenty of room for all that kid stuff like swing sets, playhouses, bicycles and building blocks. The couple reportedly are paying as much as $40 million for Billy Joel's 12-acre oceanfront mansion in East Hampton.

There are other kids in the neighborhood for playdates. Mike Tyson and Steven Spielberg, both with multiple offspring, live nearby.

Undetermined graffiti artist defaces Missouri landmark

COLUMBIA, Mo. — University of Missouri officials struggled to remove graffiti from the historic Columns as authorities searched for the person who spray painted a mysterious word across the Columbia campus landmark.

Someone painted the word "BONO" on the Columns either late Monday night or early Tuesday morning.

One letter of the word was painted on each of the four columns, which are the remnants from the fire that destroyed Academic Hall in 1829.

The 2- to 3-foot letters were painted across the north side of the landmark.

Kansas Geographic Bee. The Kansas Geographic Bee will be today in the K-State Student Union. The contest is sponsored by the Kansas Geographical Alliance, College of Education, College of Arts and Sciences and National Geographic magazine.

Amy Stout, office supervisor in the Department of Education, said student competitors will be welcomed at 1 p.m. in the Union Forum Hall.

"I'm going to welcome folks to campus," said Peter Nicholls, dean of arts and sciences. "These are children and students from all over the state."

The preliminary rounds will be in various rooms on the second floor of the Union, and the final round will be in Forum Hall, Stout said.

Five thousand students competed for the chance to enter this state competition.

"They take a test, have bees in their schools and go on from there," Stout said.

The competition will be judged by various college professors from the state of Kansas.

"Most are professors, some are from Fort Hays, here, and other universities," Stout said.

David Griffin, assistant professor in secondary education and assistant to the dean for minority studies, will be proctoring the final round.

The winners of state contests receive an all-expenses-paid trip for themselves and one parent to the national competition on May 23-24 in Washington, D.C.

The winner of the national competition will win a $25,000 scholarship.

Nicholls said having the contest at K-State will give the university recognition because it is an event that is widely publicized.

"It's good publicity for K-State and the geography department," Nicholls said.

Student wins weeklong control of Rusty's Last Chance in contest

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While Rusty's away, Dave Gunther will play.

Rusty Wilson, owner of Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon, will be out of the office for the next week, leaving control of his Aggieville drinking establishment in the hands of Gunther, senior in anthropology.

But not to worry, Chance patrons: the K-State student was carefully chosen for the bar's temporary proprietor position.

KMKF-FM 101.5 joined together with the bar last week in order to play host to "Who Wants to Win Rusty's Bar?" This contest, featuring trivia questions from the "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" board game, allowed contestants to battle over who would carry the honorary "owner" title for one week.

"The players could ask the audience, ask a friend, use a 50/50, just like the TV show," said Eric Weber, general sales manager for K-Rock.

Gunther said he emerged from the contest only one correct answer away from his closest challenger.

"I used all my lifelines, which none of the other contestants did," Gunther said. "I think I ended up with 125,000, and the next guy had 64,000."

Although Gunther signed a waiver during the contest that prohibits the distribution of free alcohol and payment for his services as owner, he said he is looking forward to his special privileges at Chance.

"Free food is a benefit," Gunther said Thursday afternoon while taking advantage of Chance's steak night with his roommate.

Thursday was the first time Gunther was able to enjoy his new job, he said, since he must balance class work with 30 hours a week at the Manhattan Regional Airport, where he works as a customer service agent for U.S. Air.

This cramped schedule has meant that the bar's new boss has been unable to take full advantage of his new position, which will end Saturday night at closing time, said Pete Anderson, a manager at Chance.

"We haven't done a lot for him yet," Anderson said. "We've got about 50 T-shirts that say 'Dave's Last Chance.' We're calling the big beer the I-Big Dayer, and we made a shot called the Gunther."

The contents of the shot were still a mystery as of Thursday afternoon, when a bartender told Gunther the drink would become whatever he decided that evening.

Weber said he wasn't entirely sure what Gunther's plans for his new bar would be.

"We'll run some 'Dave's Last Chance' commercials for him on the radio, and he'll work with the management on some specials," he said.

Plans have not been made for the coming weekend's festivities, other than a two-hour period Saturday that will feature Gunther as the bar's newest disc jockey. Gunther, a big Pearl Jam fan, said he will play nothing other than the band's music.

"This weekend is just going to be a three-day party," Anderson said.

Salina campus gains students due to high reputation in technical fields

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

What began as the ninth college in the K-State system has grown significantly in enrollment and reputation due to a booming job market, said Matt Melvin, assistant dean and director of college advancement.

Melvin, an employee of the K-State-Salina College of Technology and Aviation, said the selection of majors the college offers has generated a lot of interest in the campus.

"We're doing a better job of telling our story," he said. "We're communicating the benefits of jobs in technology and aviation."

Students graduated by K-State-Salina are faced with a drastically different job market than their predecessors, Melvin said, with opportunities available in every corner of the technological field.

"There's a supply and demand curve right now where supply is not meeting demand," he said.

Roger Steinbrock, coordinator of public relations for the college, said he also believes the current job market is a primary reason for K-State-Salina's growth.

"The main draw to this campus is that students can get jobs with degrees with the technology and aviation industries booming," he said. "I think that has created the edge potential students are looking for."

Quick turn-out time for the college is also a selling point, Steinbrock said.

Two-year programs allow students looking to enter the job market quickly a chance to do so with little trouble.

"We're always going to have that quick education — get in, get out and get a job," Steinbrock said.

One of Salina's most popular majors, aviation, has seen the most of the newest students. Melvin said there never has been a better time to pursue a career in the airline industry, and this particular program has attracted many prospective pilots.

"One student was referred to us by a Southwestern Airlines pilot," Melvin said. "If you're getting referrals from captains of major airlines, you know you have a good program."

This word-of-mouth trend lends a great hand to enrollment, Melvin said.

"We're getting a lot of people from areas we typically have not gotten to before," he said.

Enrollment time has approached for the campus again, and faculty, staff and students are preparing for a new crop of enrollees.

"We have five new student orientations planned," said Jackie Dean, K-State-Salina registrar. "We averaged about 50 each time."

Dean said this orientation allows students to enroll in classes just as K-State's main campus orientation does.

"We have departmental information sessions and let the students work with their adviser," she said.

While Steinbrock said he is hoping to see the college break the 1,000-student mark next fall, Melvin said its current growth trend may not allow for that large of an increase.

"We came in at 923 this past fall, and assuming a slight growth, an eight percent increase for next semester," Melvin said. "We're looking at anywhere between 950 to 975 students if patterns hold."

K-State-Salina evolves from its start in 1965

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Salina's college might only have taken on the K-State name nine years ago, but the campus has been a part of the city since 1965.

K-State-Salina got its start due to a bill passed by the Kansas Legislature, which allowed for the establishment of a state technical institute offering two-year programs in science and engineering technology. This new institute was constructed on land that was once part of Schilling Air Force Base, lending the name Schilling Institute to the school.

The college received many name changes over the years, including the Kansas Technical Institute in 1969 and the Kansas College of Technology in 1988. However, it was a bill passed in 1991 that gave the campus its current name when it merged with K-State.

The name change also meant the introduction of four-year degree programs to the college.

"When K-State came into existence with the college, what happened was it started looking and recruiting full-time students," said Roger Steinbrock, coordinator of public relations for K-State-Salina.

What Steinbrock called a pendulum swing occurred when the K-State name was lent to the school.

"The average age was about 30. Now, we're down to 21," Steinbrock said. "We're clear down in terms of our demographic of students."

Matt Melvin, assistant dean and director of college advancement, said he agreed the college's new name aided in recruitment.

"It legitimizes our college when you talk about K-State being the number one choice of Kansas high school graduates," Melvin said.

A few years ago, a law was passed allowing funding to come to the school from the city of Salina. Steinbrock said $7 million in funds came from this act.

"With those funds, we were able to build one of the residence halls, the college center and some of the aesthetics on campus," he said.

In the way of classes, K-State-Salina now boasts three departments for students to choose from: aviation, engineering technology, and arts, science, and business. This third department serves as a support system for the others, providing classes such as art and English for students looking to round out their degrees, Steinbrock said.

However, these degree programs sometimes give the college a reputation as a vocational-technical school, Steinbrock said, one he even believed prior to his hiring.

"I always thought, like a lot of people, that it was more vo-tech oriented than high tech, but I saw a lot of opportunity and a lot of potential," he said. "I knew it would be a win-win situation."

Steinbrock said he is always amazed at how much the college has grown, both in campus size and attendance, during its short time in existence.

"It has certainly evolved in a short period of time," he said. "My office is in a place where I look across campus and see three new buildings, and then I turn around and see how much further we can go."

IFC fails to stand up against greek hazing

The Interfraternity Council has affirmed its commitment to allow hazing in K-State fraternities.

By failing to stand firm on the five-year ban it imposed on the Acacia fraternity last May, the IFC Board showed extraordinarily weak dedication to ending the hazing that has plagued the K-State greek system.

IFC voted unanimously Wednesday to support Acacia's petition for readmittance as a K-State fraternity less than one year after sanctions were imposed. It was sanctioned for four hazing violations, three substance-abuse violations and two human-rights violations, brought forth by a former pledge.

IFC has refused to release any specific details of the various charges.

Months after its dismissal, Acacia alumni formed a 25-man task force to try to find a way to tiptoe around the banishment. After gaining IFC approval, Acacia needs only to have its petition approved by alumni and the council of IFC presidents to gain readmittance.

If Acacia receives support from the council, it would immediately become a K-State chapter again, although it wouldn't be able to begin recruiting until May 2001.

IFC's decision to support the petition is a great disservice not only to the greek system, but also to Acacia.

Because IFC board members have shown they are willing to fold to alumni — even after such serious charges — they have effectively accepted and condoned hazing.

IFC President Mike Goodpasture — who has repeatedly expressed disdain for hazing and a dedication to eliminating it at K-State — proved totally uncommitted to his cause. He should be embarrassed to display such hypocrisy.

This move by IFC will harm the greek system by showing parents and potential recruits that hazing is tolerated. In addition, the decision, if passed, will be of no benefit to Acacia.

Because Acacia was a struggling fraternity, time away from campus would have eliminated not only the memories of the actions of its members that forced its expulsion, but also of its prior struggles. Instead, Acacia has taken the first step toward being readmitted after serving less than a year of a five-year suspension. In addition, alumni have suggested that undergraduates who were members and still attend K-State have the option of reapplying for membership.

Goodpasture, however, said this was not likely to happen.

Because IFC members have acted irresponsibly and disrespectfully toward the pledge who brought these charges forward, they deserve heavy scorn. Their desire to maintain the status quo — and continue condoning hazing — is obvious.

Because of IFC's monumental failure, the decision now rests in the hands of the council of IFC presidents. K-State should hope that this group, which is composed of the presidents of all K-State fraternities, will succeed where IFC has failed so woefully.

If the council does not, it, too, will make a statement of tolerance to the greek system and the entire K-State community.

Its members will say not only that they accept hazing, but also that they will welcome those found guilty of it back into the greek system.

READERS write

Heinrich's parking plan start of long discussion

Editor,

I am writing to clarify several points mentioned in the editorial appearing in Thursday's Collegian.

The university's Parking Council is not recommending an increase in the cost of parking permits for the coming year. Jason Heinrich's proposal to implement a shuttle system from Bramlage to the Union included a suggestion that the price of campus parking permits be increased to help defray the cost of the shuttle system. The Heinrich proposal, which was endorsed by the Student Governing Association, serves as the starting point for continued discussion of a university shuttle system.

We are working with the city of Manhattan to obtain a Kansas Department of Transportation grant that will allow us to obtain professional advice on the potential ridership of a campus shuttle, identify specific routes, define acceptable wait times, develop shuttle schedules and identify one-time/continuing costs for a campus shuttle. As part of this implementation study, the consultants also will be asked to identify alternative funding methods and sources. When this phase of the study is completed at the end of the current calendar year, we will have a more specific proposal that can receive widespread discussion in all sectors of our campus community.

Through the years, we have made every effort to keep parking permit prices as low as possible. Your editorial states that the University of Kansas charges $156 per year for a student parking pass, which is "more than the $120 K-State students now pay." K-State students now pay $60 a year — and we have not increased that amount for five years. In other words, our rate is only 38 percent of the amount charged at KU. Let me again say that the Parking Council is recommending that all current parking permit prices should remain in effect for the 2000-01 academic year.

I hope your readers will take an active part in the continuing campus discussion of the possible shuttle system. This feedback over the next six or eight months is important as we fine-tune a specific proposal for a campus shuttle system.

magazine mindsets

Top-selling women's magazines exploit female body, not unlike Maxim magazine

We need a female version of Maxim. There is no getting around it. We need a magazine with advice we can actually use and, of course, the ever-helpful eye candy.

Last year in my sociology class, I went round and round with a guy who claimed Playboy was equivalent to Cosmopolitan or Glamour. I have yet to see a naked man in either of the latter, nor do I want to. And the last time I checked, you don't need to see an ID to buy either Cosmo or Glamour. I have never seen a female ashamed to buy either of those magazines, either.

The problem is that Cosmo and Glamour — the supposed magazines for females — are entirely beneficial in favoring one gender. That gender favoring is for the male. On the cover photo, with exceptions of the love issues, there are pictures of beautiful, painstakingly thin women. In these magazines, there usually is the same advice, only different wording month after month.

Now, before I continue, I will state the obvious. There is a Playgirl. However, soft-pornographic material is not something I want to see. Practically anyone who wants to can open an e-mail account and click on a forward to find that.

What I want is to find pictures of males — not of females whom I will never, no matter how many sit-ups I do or miles I run, look like.

It isn't just the pictures that make Maxim a success. There are articles about interesting topics that can be useful. Some are downright tasteless, particularly one on how to get a girl to give a guy a "favor," if you will. But some of the advice really has helped some of my male friends. They like the magazine so much they rank it right up there with beer.

I am all for women's magazines that don't focus entirely on how to get and keep a man. There should be more useful advice. The majority of the magazines supposedly geared toward females have tips on how to shatter the glass ceiling that oppresses women. Yet their advice mainly focuses on business attire, not necessarily business intelligence. In the female magazines that I mentioned above, the business advice usually ends up focusing on looks, rather than the brain department.

To prove my point, I decided to compare the March issue of Maxim to the April issue of Glamour.

On the cover of Maxim is Jenny McCarthy.

On the cover of Glamour is not Matt Damon or Brad Pitt. It is instead Angie Harmon, star of "Law & Order."

The inside issue displayed on the

of Maxim that I find tasteless is, "Sex Unlimited! Make any girl seduce you!"

The articles that I consider repetitive or even sickening on the cover of Glamour: "Is your look in or out?" Another one, "Glam Hair Special 2000." Yet another hair article, "Is your hair making you look fat? Old? Dated?" And to top it all off, "Sexy buys no woman could resist or man could miss."

In Maxim, the articles that were interesting included "Makin' The Grade — The 22 critical guy skills you just gotta know." There was a 30-page fashion special, stunt diving tips and the ever-so-helpful how to hypnotize a lobster. On the inside was advice on how to diaper a baby and the different types of formulas that are available.

Glamour did have some articles that are essential to women. These articles involved sexual health and rapists who are not convicted.

Just like the Opinion Page in the Collegian, to read magazines such as Cosmo or Glamour is my choice.

Yet it was not until recently that I began to question how helpful such magazines are. In their special fashion sections they have finally gotten around to providing tips on how to buy clothing sets that can help save money by coordinating the different combinations of clothing. Yet even then, the clothing is more than the average person can afford.

They usually try to have a small section on make-up advice. Some of it is helpful, but more of it involves thick blue eyeshadow and make-up that no woman should wear. The same with the fashion advice. If the clothing doesn't look good on their models, how on earth could it look good on the average girl? And the articles of clothing are usually not practical. It is interesting to see the trends, but only to a certain extent. Especially if those trends would make you be the laughingstock of whomever saw you.

To my fellow females, I am not suggesting that you boycott Glamour or Cosmo magazines. But the next time you are flipping through one, think of how the information is helping you. To my male counterparts, enjoy Maxim. For you have a magazine that actually is intended for your gender.

Outgoing SGA only maintained status quo; new members need to take initiative

First of all, I would just like to congratulate the outgoing student government on a job well done, for an extremely productive year and for meeting most of the goals it established for the year.

Yeah, whatever. This year's Student Governing Association — just like many of those that have preceded it — once again has failed to realize its purpose and potential and instead chose to maintain the status quo. Instead of taking the initiative to bring about drastic change on campus, the past year has been yet another lackluster year for student government. Instead of focusing their efforts on real problems and real issues that might affect students on campus, Student Senate wasted its valuable time simply trying to accomplish 13 goals — many of which it should have been doing in the first place — that were outlined in a resolution passed in September 1999.

The first goal of SGA for this year was to increase the cooperation between SGA branches and committees. After all, cooperation and compromise usually does work rather well in politics, but it should be in practice without having to adopt a resolution that makes it a goal.

Sadly, it has taken our student government this long to figure out something they should have learned while they were in elementary school. It is a miracle it was able to get anything accomplished before it realized the value of cooperation and compromise.

Similarly, SGA's fourth goal was to increase the communication between SGA and the student body. Now, perhaps I am missing something, but shouldn't there already be adequate channels of communication between SGA and the student body? The whole reason we have a student government in the first place is so that the students have a place to voice their opinions and ideas of how this university should be run — those elected and appointed to SGA merely are representatives of those voices. So what happens when elected representatives decide they no longer need to communicate with the student body? Well, the resolution to ban smoking in Manhattan eating establishments comes to mind.

On a positive note, however, it did manage to raise our fees yet again, adjust the tuition-reimbursement schedule, establish online voting and a long-overdue transportation system. And somehow it managed to find some time to restructure the SGA Web page. Wow.

Thankfully, we have an eager student body president and a fresh Student Senate that is more than capable of becoming exceptional. Fortunately, they also have the chance to start from scratch and carve their own path.

However, if they are to have a successful term, they must do far more than simply see that their promises merely are addressed, as former Student Body President Jason Heinrich and former Student Body Vice President Gabe Eckert did. Instead, they must listen to the students, take the initiative to pursue their own legislation and stop simply acting as yes-men to the president.

Additionally, Jake Worcester and Dana Pracht will need to expand their list of goals to possibly incorporate some of the other candidates' ideas and then be able to accomplish them. They also must remember to keep their promise to be open to student concerns and ideas, and then strive to respond to those concerns and ideas in a timely manner.

Most importantly, SGA needs to realize students no longer just want change; they are demanding it. Students are tired of the status quo and the poor representation associated with it, and as the last election has shown, they will do something about it if the student government does not.

Hair-care center in Union to become reality

By BEN HOPPER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

No matter what the customer prefers, services for all types of hair styles soon will be available at the K-State Student Union.

A full-service hair-care center in the lower level of the Union is under construction, said Cindie Snyder, Union marketing and promotions manager. It will be constructed in the old party room.

The center will be an authorized Paul Mitchell product retailer and will offer a wide variety of services, Snyder said. The equipment is arriving, and the search committee is in the process of hiring professional stylists, said Dave Griffin, chairman of the search committee.

Fifty applications were sent to prospective stylists, and three were returned, said Griffin, assistant professor in secondary education.

Two of these individuals were offered contracts.

Griffin said the center plans on adding two more professional stylists to extend the center's hours.

Bernard Pitts, executive director of the K-State Student Union, said the Union strives to meet the services requested by the campus.

Through the annual operations budget, the goal of building the center was attained this year, Pitts said. Pitts also said the center will look into a cooperation with Manhattan's Crum's Beauty College.

"This possibly could be used as a vehicle for their recent graduates," he said.

The prices will be competitive with the local area, project coordinator Don Becker said.

"We will offer an affordable on-campus alternative to hair care," Becker, Campus Card manager, said.

The center's grand opening is tentatively scheduled for the end of April. It will be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, and Saturday's hours will be announced at a later date, Snyder said.

Jeremy Lutz, Union Governing Board president, said the board tries to see collectively what services would attract students.

"We thought that this would be a great service to the university," he said.

Dance-a-thon's proceeds to benefit Habitat home

By JASON BECK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For people looking to dance the night away, the place to be April 14 is Ahearn Field House.

A group of organizations are sponsoring a dance-a-thon hoping to raise $45,000 to build "The House that K-State Built," a Habitat for Humanity house in the Manhattan area.

There has never been a Habitat for Humanity house funded entirely by the Manhattan chapter, said Matt Wildman, senior in management information systems and co-coordinator.

Wildman said the group decided to put on a dance marathon because it is a fund-raiser that has met with success in other parts of the country.

He said Penn State University raises more than $2 million a year during its dance-a-thon, and Iowa State raises about $400,000 a year.

"We hope this can be built on," Wildman said. "We'd like to be able to build a house every year."

Mary Bosco, a Panhellenic Council member and fellow coordinator, said there will be much more to the event than dancing.

"We have the band, Classy Cats, cheerleaders and Bill Snyder will speak," Bosco said.

She said there also would be two dance instructors who will teach anyone who wants to know how to dance at the event.

Swing, ballroom dancing, the cha-cha and the mamba, along with food and prizes, are what Bosco said she hopes will draw people to the event.

Bosco said the group plans to dedicate the house to the late Nancy Bennett, wife of K-State assistant football coach Phil Bennett. Also, 10 percent of the money it raises

The Dance-a-thon takes place from 5 p.m. April 14 until 5 a.m. April 15 in Ahearn Field House.

The event is open to the public.

will go to the K-State chapter of Habitat for Humanity.

She said the people who are organizing the event are a very diverse group.

"We have greeks, non-greeks, Senate members and people from the residence halls," Bosco said. "All different kinds of people are coming together to support this cause."

Bosco said they got the idea from a Kansas City-area high school, Shawnee Mission East, whose students get together to raise money and help build houses for Habitat for Humanity.

She said that because the high school students named the project "The House that East Built," K-State's will be "The House that K-State Built."

John Schalekamp, freshman in mechanical engineering, worked on the first house that Shawnee Mission East built for Habitat for Humanity in spring 1998.

"I did it because a friend talked me into it," he said. "But once I started working, I saw what a worthy cause it was."

Schalekamp said he thought students' energy would be well spent in supporting this project.

Both Bosco and Wildman said that although this is the group's first fund-raiser, if all goes well, it will plan future events.

"I think Habitat has set up a good program that makes it easy for organizations to fund and build a house," Wildman said.

Tennis squad prepares for Oklahoma duals

By DEREK BOSS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

If success is derived from momentum, then the K-State women's tennis squad should have an extraordinary weekend.

"We've gained some momentum and some confidence from our experiences this season, especially yesterday," head coach Steve Bietau said Thursday. "We're just focusing on playing the best tennis possible."

No. 32 K-State (11-4) is coming off a 5-4 defeat of No. 56 Kansas — the Wildcats' first victory against the Jayhawks since 1973, snapping a 34-game losing streak.

The victory over Kansas elevated K-State to a first-place tie with the Texas Longhorns in the Big 12 Conference standings. It also improved the Cats' conference record to 6-0.

Not only is a shot at the conference title at stake; K-State also has a chance to be host of its first NCAA Regional in May.

This weekend, the Cats and their seven-match winning streak will be pitted against two more Big 12 opponents.

Saturday, K-State will face Oklahoma at 10 a.m. at the Washburn Tennis Facility in Manhattan, followed by an 11 a.m. match against No. 59 Oklahoma State on Sunday.

The Sooners (5-9) have posted a winless 0-5 conference record so far this spring.

Anna Pampoulova returns a shot against KU on Wednesday afternoon at the Washburn Tennis Facility during her singles match, K-State meets both Oklahoma and Oklahoma State this weekend at the Washburn Tennis Facility.

Oklahoma is riding a three-game losing skid, with losses to Kansas, Baylor and Oklahoma State.

On the road, the Sooners have not fared well, dropping four of five matches away from Norman this year.

However, Oklahoma has a 7-1 edge over the Cats in the career series in Manhattan, and the Sooners have won eight consecutive matches against K-State, with the Cats' last win coming in the 1992 Big Eight Tournament.

"Oklahoma has had some struggles this year, but they're a capable team," Bietau said. "He (head coach Mark Johnson) is going to have them ready to play."

"Every match is important to us. I know we'll be favored to win the match, but the team that's favored isn't always the one that wins."

Meanwhile, Oklahoma State (9-3) will bring a 2-3 Big 12 record to Manhattan Sunday.

The Cowgirls post a 3-1 record on the road and a 9-1 series mark when making the trip to K-State.

Bietau said Oklahoma State is a dangerous team at this point in the spring season.

"We saw them at our fall doubles tournament," he said. "They have very strong doubles, as well as comparable results against some opponents we've faced this year. It will be a very difficult match."

Although one might think doubles could be a concern for K-State, Bietau said an all-around performance is what's needed to win the match.

"There's nine points in a match, and you need five to win," he said. "I don't care where we get those five points. We've played average to great doubles in recent matches, so it's not much of a concern — it's more of a fine tuning."

Although K-State sits at the top of the conference statistically, Bietau said the high point for him is playing great tennis.

"Obviously, I'm happy to be winning, but I'm not sure it carries the same significance for me as others," he said. "This team is capable of playing great tennis, and we want to get as close as we can to that standard."

The K-State baseball team has reached the midpoint of the Big 12 Conference season, but just barely, as the Wildcats begin a three-game series with Oklahoma State (17-12 overall, 5-7 Big 12) at 2 p.m. today at Frank Myers Field.

A few more injuries to the Cats' already reeling pitching staff just might force K-State head coach Mike Clark and pitching coach Mike Hensley to don uniforms and throw from the mound as they did in their college days.

"We've had more injuries than the 'MASH' unit of TV had," Clark said. "We've gone through injuries with not only our pitching staff, but the outfield, too, that have really limited not just who can play, but what we as coaches can do in certain situations."

K-State (9-19, 1-13) has lost junior Brock Smith and sophomore Blake Johnson, both pitchers, as well as junior closer/outfielder Kelvin Day for the season. In addition, sophomore pitcher Kurt Lehmann is out indefinitely, while freshman pitcher Derek Ver Helst is slowly coming back from an injury.

"Healthwise, you know you're going to have injuries, but you don't anticipate that you'll have four key guys go down at different points in time," Hensley said.

The real kicker is that all were playing a significant role with the team at the time of their departure, yet, except for Smith and Johnson, none were being counted on to be big contributors at the season's outset.

The dismissal of last year's leading pitcher and hitter, Brett Reid, at the start of the year hindered the team even more. The Wildcats currently stand in 10th place in the conference in team batting average at .278 and rank last in pitching with a team ERA of 8.22.

K-State's season hitting statistics are an example of polar opposites. The Wildcats have six players with at least 45 at-bats hitting higher than .290 but also have five players hitting less than .270, with three of those hitting less than .200.

When he compared the 1999 team to the 2000 squad, Clark said the biggest difference is that this year's team is easily affected by big innings, something that needs to be corrected for the Cats to make the season-ending, eight-team Big 12 Tournament.

"We are a team that loses its heart very easily. It seems like with this group, every time something goes wrong the air goes out of the balloon and there's nobody there to blow it back up," Clark said. "We've chewed them, we've patted them on the backs, we've done a lot of different things, and hopefully we'll find some guys who will step up and lead on and off the field to finish the season strong."

K-State second baseman Chad Tabor throws to first base for an out in a home game earlier this year. The Wildcats will be the hosts of a weekend series against the Oklahoma State Cowboys starting this afternoon.

Snyder correct in stance despite mysterious motives, scheduling of opponents

The Snyder Rules were expanded and explained just a bit Tuesday afternoon at Vanier Football Complex.

Before this is taken any further, allow me to explain exactly what the Snyder Rules are. Everyone familiar with K-State football should have some inkling of this term. Much like "The Jordan Rules," author Sam Smith's 1992 book focused on star guard Michael Jordan's hold over the Chicago Bulls' players, ownership and the NBA in part, the Snyder Rules pertain to Coach Bill Snyder's own governing of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and Manhattan, to some degree.

No one will argue that Snyder is one of K-State's most influential figureheads. Heck, the guy was named the university's top power player last semester. Athletic Director Max Urick might hold the title, but Snyder possesses the power and the final say when it comes to K-State football and, often, beyond.

This hasn't been a problem for most of Snyder's decade-plus reign in Manhattan. The reason is simple. Multiple winning seasons + bowl appearances = happy alumni and little criticism for Snyder's controlled and often secretive approach to running the Wildcats' program.

Still, these successive seasons of top-10 rankings and continued improvement have worked against Snyder in some ways. The luster of winning after so many years of humiliation has worn off as K-State football has proven itself to be a legitimate national power; fans have begun adjusting to this new position as well. In other words, K-State fans are getting more and more curious about Snyder's approach. They're also more prone to questioning Snyder's decisions now that satisfaction with a 10-win season has been replaced with annual demands for national title contention.

This leads directly to criticism of Snyder's scheduling of opponents. The fact that Bowling Green and Indiana State were common non-conference opponents didn't bother Catbackers for the first part of Snyder's reign. It generally was viewed as a stepping stone to greater things. And no matter how loudly national publications and ESPN analysts berated Snyder for a weak out-of-conference schedule, fans knew their gridiron savior would upgrade when the time was right.

Things seemed to be headed in the right direction when Louisiana Tech was added to the 2000 schedule earlier this year, and rumors of a future home-and-home series with the University of Southern California seemed closer to becoming a reality. Then the bottom dropped out without warning. Only needing to add his signature to make the USC deal legit, Snyder turned it down with no indication of why. This time, the majority of fans did not defend the Snyder Rules. Instead, many chose to lambaste the man for turning down a deal that they believed would have earned K-State national respect and argued that the decision sent the program in the opposite direction.

Tuesday was the first chance for the news media to talk to Snyder about spring practice. More so, it was a chance for Snyder to explain his rationale for turning down the USC deal.

The question didn't surface until the end of the press conference, but Snyder made no attempt to dodge it. Snyder was straightforward in his explanation and stated that every decision made he stands by, good or bad. While some might believe turning down the USC series was an error, Snyder's reasoning was simple. During the time Snyder was considering USC, two prominent football programs that Snyder declined to identify had a schedule opening due to other teams pulling out. K-State suddenly was in the mix as a possible replacement.

With a new option to consider, Snyder didn't shut the door on the USC series. Unfortunately, Trojan officials needed an answer regarding the proposed deal ASAP. This is where the deal ended. Snyder has never assimilated to someone else's timeline. His meticulous nature and thorough approach to everything is legendary. If there's a decision to be made, Snyder will make it only when every angle and possibility has been explored. It's possible that it takes the man an hour to cook minute rice.

Anyhow, the point is that USC's ASAP approach resulted in a DOA answer. Without more time to consider his options, Snyder informed USC that "I am not ready to make that decision at this time," and that was that.

Do I wish Snyder had accepted the series? Absolutely. Like every K-State fan, I yearn for the chance to prove to a traditional West Coast power that K-State football is legit. Just thinking back to 1998 and UCLA coach Bob Toledo's pathetic claims that his Bruins were the better team fuels the desire.

However, do I think Snyder was wrong for turning down the proposed series? Absolutely not. Although many believe this was a setback for the program, Snyder's explanation for doing so was honest and thorough, just like the man. Without time to make the decision on his terms, Snyder refused to just jump in and hope for the best. It shouldn't have happened any other way. Snyder's track record is solid. There's no reason to doubt his decision was made in the best interest of the program.

Although the methods to the gray-haired coach's madness often frustrate K-State fans and the national media, remember this: Without the Snyder Rules, Wildcat football would be an activity shared by only a few poor souls trapped inside KSU Stadium.

Lacrosse team to face Illinois Sunday

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hidden among the giants of football and basketball but climbing the ladder towards the upper echelon of its sport is the K-State Lacrosse Club.

The club is now a member of the Central Collegiate Lacrosse Association, which includes perennial powers Michigan and Illinois. It is a step up from last year, when the team was part of the Great Plains Lacrosse League, team captain Jay Sweet said.

"It was kind of a joke," Sweet said. "It was just a bunch of men's clubs. Games were a lot like pick-up games. We really climbed quite a few rungs on the ladder when we joined the CCLA."

As part of the Great Plains League, K-State often finished in the top two, but as the Cats' 4-8 record this season shows, the team has struggled somewhat against the much stiffer competition it now faces.

"We felt that we would be fairly competitive, maybe finish in the middle of the pack," Sweet said. "We lost a couple of critical games we should have won. And we got beat up pretty bad by some of the bigger teams in the league. Michigan beat us 25-1, but at the time Michigan was ranked number six and we were number 96.

"But being our first year in the big league, it's not that shabby," Sweet said. "We know we're better than that and want to get better."

Belied by the Michigan beating is the improvement the team has made since last year, Sweet said. "We're so much better skillwise than last year," Sweet said.

K-State students and area lacrosse fans will have the chance to see how improved the team is at 1 p.m. Sunday when it plays No. 22 Illinois at Memorial Stadium. Despite Illinois' high ranking, Sweet said he believed K-State would have a chance.

"We're hoping Illinois looks past us, that they'll think they can come down and stomp us," Sweet said.

In addition to seeing a good game, Sweet said the contest offers several advantages to watching some of the bigger-name sports.

"All fans get VIP parking and free seating."

The game might also get the word out about the club and the sport of lacrosse, which has similar athletic requirements to some other more well-known sports, Sweet said.

"The footwork for lacrosse is similar to football and basketball," he said. "New players just have to learn to catch and throw, and that takes about 15 minutes."

Women's basketball coach to be honored at UT-Austin

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The University of Texas will induct a Wildcat into its Hall of Honor, this weekend.

One of K-State's own, women's basketball associate head coach and native Texan Kamie Ethridge, is a member of the first class to be inducted into the University of Texas Women's Athletics Hall of Honor.

Ethridge, a 1987 Texas graduate and All-American basketball player, will join seven other All-Americans and two distinguished administrators, including her former coach Jody Conradt, on Saturday at the Frank Erwin Center in Austin.

As great a career as Ethridge had at Texas, the honor came as a complete surprise, she said.

"Jody Conradt is the kind of person who's anti putting your name on the back of your jersey," Ethridge said. "She's old school, no retiring numbers. Twenty-five years into women's basketball in Texas, they've never had a hall of fame. To see that she's made this decision to start a hall of fame for women, to celebrate 25 years of women's basketball in Texas, it's a great feeling."

Conradt's old-school philosophies have never kept Ethridge from shining brightly. As a point guard at Texas, Ethridge garnered almost every honor possible.

To be brief, she led her team to the 1986 NCAA Championship, won most valuable player honors in the title game, was a two-time Kodak All-American and won the Broderick Cup, an honor bestowed to the top female student-athlete in the country in all sports each year. Finally, in 1986, Ethridge won the Frances Pomeroy Naismith Player of the Year award.

Still, the spot in the Hall of Honor came as a shock, Ethridge said.

"I'm shocked that I'm one of the 10 people," Ethridge said. "I don't know how I got on that list. The people on that list are not just known at the University of Texas or the state of Texas, they're known nationally and worldwide."

"I just feel proud to be inducted," Ethridge said. "The hall of fame shows how women's basketball should be."

The hall will not just honor basketball players, however. Included in the inaugural class are volleyball players, track and field athletes, swimmers, golfers and the current executive director of the Women's Sports Foundation.

All of the inductees will be introduced at the Texas Relays. They also will be treated to a performance by Barbara Conrad, a world-renowned opera singer and Texas graduate. All in all, the ceremonies and celebrations will be typical of Texas, Ethridge said.

"If you know anything about Texas, it's going to be done classy, and it's going to be done right, and it's going to be done big," Ethridge said.

ETHRIDGE

Durbin pitches Royals to victory against Toronto

TORONTO — Rookie Chad Durbin picked a near-perfect day to show off to his family.

Durbin's family drove all the way from Warsaw, Ind., to see him make his major-league debut as a starter. He allowed just one hit in six innings and Kansas City scored all nine of its runs in the sixth inning as the Royals beat the Toronto Blue Jays 9-3 Thursday.

"I got three game balls, and I gave two of them to my family," said Durbin, whose mother, Debra; stepfather, Max; and 16-year-old sister, Stephanie, made the trek.

"They came up yesterday, drove all night, got in at 3, slept till 11, got up and watched the game, and now they're headed back out,"

Durbin said.

Durbin said his sister was especially pleased.

"She was glad to get the day off of school for me, and she'll do the majority of the driving back," Durbin said. "I'm glad they were here."

Durbin (1-0) retired the side in the first, second, fourth and fifth innings. The 22-year-old right-hander, making just his second major-league appearance, walked one and struck out two.

"It was just throwing to the glove, playing catch," Durbin said. "If you think about the hitter, you get scared. It was a blast. Hopefully in five days I can duplicate it."

Darrin Fletcher's first-pitch homer leading off the bottom of the third was Toronto's lone hit off Durbin. In his major-league debut at Detroit last Sept. 26, Durbin allowed one hit in 2 1/3 scoreless innings.

He made the jump from Double-A Wichita, where he was 8-10 with a 4.64 ERA last season.

"We knew he was a special pitcher, but for him to come out in his first major-league start and pitch like he did was just special," Kansas City's Mike Sweeney said.

Toronto's Brad Fullmer, who hit a two-run homer off reliever Brad Rigby in the ninth, was impressed with Durbin's poise.

"Sometimes you see a guy make his debut, and he's going to make mistakes," Fullmer said. "But he was making all of his pitches to the outside of the plate. He was quality the whole time."

The Royals, who split their four-game series against Toronto, sent 13 men to the plate in the sixth.

Sweeney singled home two runs. Joe Randa had two RBIs, and Johnny Damon and Carlos Feables one each. The Royals also scored on catcher Darrin Fletcher's throwing error to third, first baseman Carlos Delgado's bases-loaded high throw to the plate and right fielder Raul Mondesi's fielding error.

Toronto starter Kelvin Escobar (0-1) gave up three runs on seven hits in 5 1/3 innings.

"My location wasn't so good," Escobar said.

Shriner Frankie Mullin plays the organ for circus-goers outside Weber Arena on Thursday evening.

MIKE SHEPHERD/COLLEGE

Though he missed most of the show because of his security duties, "I got to see the cats," he said.

There were no special effects at the show. With the low catwalk, only one trapeze artist had enough space to perform.

With a dirt floor and twilight streaming in through the western windows of the arena, circus owner Jim Hamid decided to dress more casually for the evening.

"Typically, I'd be out here in a tux," he said before the show started. "but in this arena, I figured I'd dress like the crew."

For Shriner John Eveleth, who participated in the displaying of the colors before the circus, it was like being a child again.

He said he remembered his mother taking him to circuses when he was a youngster.

"That's back when they called them 'big tops,'" he said.

SENATE

"It's a two-way street," he said. "I think we need to pull together as a team and work as a team."

But that isn't his biggest challenge.

Legitimacy with the student body is something he said is a priority.

"It's an undercurrent in everything I've been doing ... that's always going to be a task," he said.

Working alongside Lenkner is Vice Chair Lance Stafford, sophomore in elementary education.

Stafford will also serve on the Joint Committee on Diversity, something he said is important to him.

In other business, Ben Hopper, junior in agricultural communication and political science, was chosen as Student Senate representative to Faculty Senate.

Amber Blake, sophomore in marketing and international business, was chosen as Student Senate Intern Coordinator.

well-educated and open-minded knows this is material which students should learn."

The decisions made by both school boards are surrounded by controversy, considering the relation of the issue with the Constitution, Buddy Gray, Faculty Senate president, said.

"I think it is an imposition of a religious view on the public and a violation of the Constitution of the United States," Gray said. "There is a reason for separation of church and state. The framers of the Constitution were religious men, but they realized that they were dealing with a very diverse population."

Gray said he thinks the statement approved by Oklahoma's House is unfair to those individuals who do not believe in the same concepts.

"I am very tolerant and accepting of other points of view, but I am concerned with the forcing of those ideas on others," Gray said. "I am concerned with students, ultimately. Education must be broad and inclusive. It should be a multiplicity of views."

now stays at home with the kids while his wife works.

"It's been great for me," he said. "It's a chance to watch the kids grow and do things with them. It's pretty wonderful."

Denner also goes on shopping trips with them to the People's Grocery Cooperative, where he buys organic produce.

Some of the things Denner taught his kids are how to put food, vegetable remains and leaves in a compost bucket placed outside. There also are two barrels that collect rainwater from two downspouts, which the family uses to water the garden. Water from the other two downspouts go directly underground to the fruit trees.

Nothing is overlooked in this house to conserve energy, it seems.

Even the cat that lives outside has its own styrofoam insulation inside the doghouse.

Metal MENDING

STORY AND PHOTOS BY JUSTIN HAYWORTH

Steve Jordan shows Tim Howard, senior in art, some of the finer points of hammering metal. Jordan graduated from K-State in 1978 and is back this weekend to participate in the Metal Smithing Society's fourth annual Repair Days.

Repair Days fund-raiser begins today in City Park

The K-State Metal Smithing Society's fourth annual Repair Days fund-raiser starts today with a slide presentation and continues through Sunday with metal repair work at City Park.

Members of the society will spend the weekend repairing jewelry, pots, pans and silver brought in by the community. This volunteer work gives them a new way to approach metal smithing, Elliott Pujol, metal smithing instructor, said.

"They are getting an added educational viewpoint by participating in these repair days," Pujol said. "The types of things the students will learn are not the kind of things that I teach them in the classroom situations."

The events start at 10:30 a.m.

today with a slide presentation in the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum from K-State alumnus and metal smith Steve Jordan, showing some of his recent metal work. From there, the repair portion of Repair Days will start as members of the Metal Smithing Society move to the City Park Pavilion and start accepting items to be repaired at 3 p.m. and work at repairing them until 6 p.m.

On Saturday, the group will be repairing items from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. On Sunday the Smiths will

"We get to use our skills to help the community, and the community gets to see that we're here."

Just Woods
president of Metal Smithing Society

wrap up the remaining repairs starting at 10 a.m. and finishing by 3 p.m., Pujol said.

The society will be asking for donations based on what it would normally cost to have the item repaired, said Lael Woods, president of the Metal Smithing Society.

Woods also said she thought this weekend would be a good opportunity for the society to get exposure in the community.

"We get to use our skills to help the community, and the community gets to see that we're here," Woods said. "A lot of people don't even know, even here at the university, that metal smithing is around."

Jordan, who graduated in 1978, was asked to return and take part in this year's fund-raiser because he could offer the students a different perspective on metal smithing, Pujol said.

Jordan worked with students at a metal-smithing workshop at West Stadium on Thursday afternoon. He focused on basic hammering and shaping skills with the students.

"I really enjoy the interaction with students," Jordan said. "It's nice to have a chance to come back and see what's going on, and see what the facilities look like and see what kind of students are going through the program."

Sertoma Art Show donates proceeds to Special Olympics

By TARYN FORT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Art is not only to be found in a museum.

The Sertoma Luncheon Club of Manhattan is sponsoring its second annual Sertoma Art Show and Sale from 2 to 6 p.m. on Sunday. The event will be at the Houston Street Ballroom, 427 Houston St.

The Sertoma Club is a civic-service organization that works on the international level with people with speech, hearing and sight problems.

The Manhattan chapter of the club is a main sponsor of the Special Olympics and will be donating all proceeds from the show to the children's organization.

"The members of the Sertoma Luncheon Club meet twice a week at

The Little Apple Brewing Company and listen to speakers who educate on the issues that we support," said Sheila Kamler, treasurer of the Sertoma Luncheon Club. "Our particular club is focusing on children-and sight problems, so we thought that an art show would be an interesting way to raise some money for the cause."

The show will feature about 30 area artists whose demonstrations will include ceramics, pottery, oil paintings, watercolor, jewelry and prints.

"The prices for the artwork will range anywhere from $3 to $700," Kamler said. "We hope to bring in as much support as possible for the Special Olympics and also bring some attention to the art that is widely available in this area of Kansas."

Some of the artists being featured are Angelo Garzio, Ronna Tyson, Judith Willingham and James Coffman.

"Some of the artists are not as well known as others, but they are all so talented. For example, Dr. Jim Coffman is one of K-State's own, being the provost of the university," Kamler said. "It is probably not too well known that he is also an artist and will be showing and selling his work at the show this weekend."

Oil painting has been one of Coffman's hobbies for twenty years.

"I have a strong interest in painting as a whole," he said. "All three pieces that I am showing were done a few years ago. This is the first show I have done in affiliation with the Sertoma Luncheon Club."

The show also will feature a silent auction of items donated by area businesses.

"So many businesses in Manhattan have been extremely supportive in giving items for the silent auction," Kamler said. "We have everything from gift certificates at restaurants and motels to a cell phone and trees. Coca-Cola, Nespor's Wine and Spirits and Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbecue are just a few of the sponsors that are donating refreshments for the attendees."

Nespor's Wine and Spirits will sponsor the show for the second consecutive year.

"We are more than willing and happy to be donating all of the wine for the entire event," said Scott Schneider, co-owner of Nespor's Wine and Spirits. "The Sertoma Club is made up of people who have such a sincere interest in the cause and we just really enjoy working with them and helping them out all that we can."

Vet Med plans dog jog

By BEN HOPPER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Vanessa Kuonen said her dog Lester loves to run.

"He pulled me the whole way last year," Kuonen said. "It was kind of the joke of the race."

The College of Veterinary Medicine class of 2001 and the Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital will sponsor the 5th Annual Dog and Jog, which will consist of a 10-kilometer, 5-kilometer and a family fun run, on Saturday.

Kuonen, a third-year veterinary student, and her German short-haired pointer ran the 10-kilometer last year. She said she was the first female to finish with a dog.

Kuonen said both she and Lester will run again this year.

"This event is to help raise money for the Kansas Specialty Dog Service," said Becky Graf, co-chairwoman of the event.

One-third to half of the money raised will go to the KSDS, co-chairwoman Jenny Messinger said.

The KSDS, a non-profit organization in Washington, Kan., trains and places canine assistants to those in need, Messinger, third-year veterinary student, said.

"KSDS is a good, local program," she said. "It trains dogs for the disabled, elderly and blind."

Graf said about 150 runners have registered.

"Usually 100 more runners register the day of the event," she said.

The 10 km and 5 km races that stay within the campus begin at 9 a.m., with the fun run at 10:30 a.m. Participants will meet at Trotter Hall.

The awards assembly will start at 11:30 a.m., Graf said.

Registration costs $16, and runners can still enter at 8 a.m. Saturday morning, Messinger said.

"With that, you get a long-sleeved T-shirt and information on the veterinary medical teaching hospital and KSDS," she said.

Dr. Roger Fingland, head of the Veterinary Teaching Hospital, said it is important for people to realize that the event is organized by students.

"They seek sponsors, organize the runners and pull off the event," he said. "It has been an exceptionally ran event in years past."

Fingland said the students want to generate enough money to donate more than $1,000 to the Kansas Specialty Dog Service.

"This event speaks greatly of their commitment to the KSDS," he said.

110,000 expected to attend 5th annual Country Stampede

By BROOKE ERICKSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fifth annual Country Stampede will be stomping into Manhattan. The show will run June 23-25 at Tuttle Creek State Park. This year, 110,000 people are expected to attend the festival.

"Last year, we had 103,000 in attendance over the four day course," Paige Roesler, festival manager, said. "We started out with 60,000 in attendance in 1996, and the numbers have been increasing."

The event begins June 22 with a kick-off party featuring Collin Raye, Yankee Grey and Dustin Evans. The day costs $10, or it's free with a VIP ticket, which are on sale now. If tickets are purchased by April 21, a one-day pass is $30, three-day pass is $60 and VIP seats are $325. Starting June 21, prices for each go up $5 per ticket and $10 more at the gate.

VIP seating has reserved seating, complimentary beverages, free car parking, which is $15 otherwise, and lunch and dinner buffets.

Other options include sitting on the lawn, bringing lawn chairs or camping.

Shannon Smith begins the festival at noon on June 23. Chely Wright, Oak Ridge Boys, Montgomery Gentry, Sawyer Brown and Styx will follow Smith's performance.

Every year the Country Stampede tries to bring in a non-traditional country band. Last year, it had Kansas and Lynyrd Skynyrd. This year organizers are bringing in Styx.

"We like to add variety in the show to encourage more patrons to come out that aren't die-hard country fans," Ashley Dooley, VIP manager, said. "Last year we had a great response to Kansas and Lynyrd Skynyrd."

June 24 will start with Heartland at 11:30 a.m., then features Dustin Evans, Rhett Akins, Lee Ann Womack, Kenny Chesney and Dwight Yoakam.

The Stampede concludes June 25 with Jill Marie, Brad Paisley, Sammy Kershaw, Lonestar and Brooks & Dunn.

Sarah Phillips, freshman in psychology, said she wishes she knew more about the festival.

"There's not enough publicity about it," Phillips said. "I had a friend go last year, and he said it was fun. I would go, but I don't hear enough about it to know about it."

Alicia Flowers, freshman in music education, said she feels the same way.

"I would like to go, too," Flowers said. "I never hear about it. I'd go because I love country. This kind of sounds like a Woodstock for country music."

The festival also will feature souvenir booths selling T-shirts, tank tops, hats and other items that advertise the bands.

Concert-goers also can find a swinging saloon at Stampede.

In the afternoons, there will be a beer garden where there will be a group playing, such as Dustin Evans, in the saloon after every main stage act.

The festival will have 15 food vendors, including Indian tacos and Hawaiian ice.

"We have hot and cold food served to suit all different tastes," Dooley said.

19 Marines dead in crash in Arizona

By MICHELLE RUSHLO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MARANA, Ariz. — A Marine Corps aircraft attempting to land during a nighttime training mission crashed and burst into flames, killing all 19 aboard and adding to a checkered history for a new breed of hybrid plane that can take off and land like a helicopter.

The MV-22 tiltrotor Osprey, which looks like a turboprop, is part of the new generation of aircraft scheduled to eventually replace all of the Marines' primary troop-transport helicopters. The military began flying the aircraft six months ago.

A Pentagon spokesman said the names of the Marines killed in Saturday night's crash — 15 passengers and four crew members — and the base where they were stationed would not be released until their families were notified, which could take through today.

On Sunday, investigators were reviewing the crash site at Marana Northwest Regional Airport west of Tucson. Few details were released.

Military officials said the downed aircraft had been attempting to land at the airport when it crashed. It was one of two Ospreys simulating the evacuation of civilians.

Firefighters said witnesses reported seeing the plane head straight down and become engulfed in flames after it crashed.

"It's an unfortunate situation. Our sympathies go out to the families of these Marines," said Marine Lt. Mark Carter, a spokesman for the Marine Corps Air Station in Yuma, where the flight originated.

In a statement, President Clinton said: "This terrible loss of life is a reminder of how many men and women in the nation's military put their lives at risk, each and every day, so that we might be a free people, and the cause of peace can be advanced throughout the world."

The crash is again raising questions about the safety of the aircraft that has been more than a decade in the making.

Former President Bush's administration tried to scuttle the project after early safety concerns, but builders say modifications from the original design make today's Ospreys lighter and safer.

The Marine Corps lists two other Osprey crashes, both early in the aircraft's development: One, in 1991 in Delaware, was blamed on gyro wiring problems; and the other, in 1992 in Virginia, killed all seven people on board after an engine caught fire.

Jointly produced by Bell Helicopter Textron of Fort Worth, Texas, and Boeing Co., in Ridley Park, Pa., the Osprey can achieve speeds of more than 400 mph and an altitude of 25,000 feet. It is designed to carry up to 24 troops or external loads of 15,000 pounds.

The hybrid aircraft flies at twice the speed, has twice the range and carries twice the payload of the Vietnam-era CH-46 helicopters it is expected to replace. The Marines have ordered 360 Ospreys to be delivered by 2014 at a cost of $44 million each. Capt. Rob Winchester, a Pentagon spokesman, said.

The Marines had only five Ospreys in use: four out of Yuma, including the one that crashed, and one based at the Marine Corps Air Station, New River, N.C.

Boeing spokeswoman Susan Bradley said it was not yet clear whether her company would join the investigation. Bell spokesman Bob Leder said the company will join the investigation if asked by the military.

Military planners see the aircraft as a means of getting more U.S. troops and pilots safely out of danger zones and enhancing drug interdiction, humanitarian and civilian rescue capabilities.

"It met or exceeded all of the requirements that we've needed," Winchester said.

300 women march at rally, demand end to violence, harassment

Beth Wanek (left), freshman in environmental design, embraces her teary-eyed sister Meg Wanek at the Take Back the Night rally held at the south entrance of Hale Library on Friday night. Meg Wanek, a sophomore at Central Catholic high school in Grand Island, Neb., came down just for the event. "We have strong beliefs and have a lot of friends who've been the victims of domestic violence and molestation," the older Wanek sister said.

More than 300 women's voices echoed through Aggieville as they marched down the streets singing, "Women unite, take back the night." Friday during the Take Back the Night March.

Women and men met outside of Hale Library for the march at 6:20 p.m. The rally was organized by Ordinary Women, a feminist group on campus.

As people waited for the march to begin, members of OW, dressed in pink T-shirts, passed out chalk for the participants to chalk their feet with.

Sarah Craig, OW member and sophomore in English, said the chalking was meant to show those who were not able to witness the event an impression of the number of people who participated.

By the time the group left for the march, more than 150 feet remained in the form of chalk outlines. Some feet were marked with initials, some said things like, "Unite," "Women walk for non-violence," and "Take a stand."

Melissa Divine, founder of OW and women's studies instructor, began the rally to kick off the march.

Divine welcomed the crowd and thanked participants for coming despite the 40 degree temperature.

She explained the importance of the march as a step toward ending violence against women and spoke of what it meant to be a non-believer of a rape culture.

"We are all non-believers," Divine said. "For the women here we refuse to believe what we have been told we are — passive, silly and hysterical. We refuse to believe we should be silent. For one night, yell with reckless abandon and dare someone to silence us."

She then read a list of 30 demands written by members of OW. The demands were for ending violence against women on our campus, our community and in our world.

"We demand an end to sexual harassment, rape, incest, battering and all forms of violence against women," Divine said. "We demand that the Office of Student Life at Kansas State University include in their statistics the rapes, batteries and sexual assaults that occur off-

5 Wildcats expected to be picked in 2000 NFL Draft

By DEREK BOSS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

FILE PHOTO BY JEFF COOPER/COLLEGIAN
K-State linebacker Mark Simoneau (42) celebrates with teammates after his 24-yard return of an interception in the fourth quarter of their game in Stillwater, Okla., last season.

As the 2000 NFL Draft nears, K-State fans are keeping a watchful eye on several Wildcat senior standouts who could be selected in the top-three rounds.

Linebacker Mark Simoneau is one of five Cats expected to be drafted this spring.

Only eight football players in K-State's 103-year football history have been selected in the first two rounds. Veryl Switzer ranks as the highest Wildcat draft pick, selected third overall in 1954.

Looking at this year's draft, the highly touted Simoneau is being considered as a possible second- or third-round selection by draft analysts nationwide.

Simoneau's former Wildcat teammates are excited to see how the Butkus Award runner-up fares in the 2000 draft after his stellar college career.

"If his successes take him on the same path he's taken here, he's going to be a Hall of Famer in the NFL," junior linebacker Ben Leber said. "I wish nothing but the best for Mark."

"He's a great guy and a great player. I was hoping he'd be the first pick of the whole draft. That's not going to happen, but I wish the best for him."

However, as far as Simoneau going in the first round, Leber remains optimistic.

"Everybody talks about his height disadvantage," Leber said of the 6-foot, 240-pound Simoneau. "It doesn't matter in height, it counts more in the heart — and that's what Mark's got. He's got the physical attributes and the heart, so if more people saw that, he would go higher in the first round."

Former KSU football player arrested for misdemeanor

Former K-State football player Nilijah McCoy was arrested Friday for failing to appear in court. The arrest was the second for McCoy, a K-State defensive tackle from 1998 to '99.

The first arrest stemmed from a September 1999 incident when McCoy allegedly obstructed the legal process. McCoy was a highly touted player from Dodge City Community College, where in 1996 he earned first-team All-Jayhawk-Conference honors. McCoy was also a second-team J.C. All-American. In 1997 McCoy transferred to K-State to play football. After being redshirted in 1997, McCoy was set to play for the Wildcats in 1998, but a blood clot in his leg hindered his chance to play and he missed the entire season. In 1999, McCoy played in seven of 11 football games.

McCoy could not be reached for comment.

Reservist's death leads to Marine captain's conviction

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. — A Marine captain convicted of charges stemming from the heat-related death of a reservist received a reprimand Sunday and was ordered to forfeit $3,600 in future pay.

Lt. Col. Ralph Kohlmann, a military judge, found Capt. Victor Arana guilty of dereliction of duty and failure to obey an order.

He could have given Arana up to nine months in prison and dismissed him from the Marines but instead ordered a reprimand and fine.

Arana's attorney had argued that Arana's career as a Marine officer was effectively over and that he shouldn't be dismissed from the service as well.

"His promotion has been taken away. He has a federal conviction that will follow him the rest of his life," attorney Mark Stevens said. "A dismissal in this case would be grossly disproportionate to the actions he's been convicted of."

Arana, 28, of Chicago, was charged in the death of Lance Cpl. Giuseppe

"Joey" Leto. Leto, 21, of New Milford, Conn., died after a July 7 night march in 80-degree heat. The death certificate says it was "heat-related."

Arana asked for forgiveness Sunday from Leto's family and his fellow Marines. Facing the Leto family, he read a prepared statement expressing deep remorse for the reservist's death.

"Not a day goes by that I don't think about him," Arana said, as Leto's relatives sobbed. "I would do or give anything to be able to bring him back. Many nights I have lain awake haunted by the memories of my own inactions during the march on July 7."

Arana said Leto's death and his conviction are burdens he will carry the rest of his life. His pregnant wife, Betty, sat behind him when the sentence was read.

"On July 7, my inactions failed both my students and my staff. For that, I am sorry," Arana said. "I never intended for anyone to get hurt. It is my hope that the Leto family will someday be able to forgive me."

Prosecutors said Arana violated standard operating procedures for conditioning hikes and showed a careless disregard for his men. Maj. Chris Hamilton had asked the judge for Arana's dismissal.

Defense attorneys argued that Arana was a rookie company commander in charge of the unit for only 16 days and that he didn't receive proper instructions from his superiors and had delegated authority to his non-commissioned officers as allowed in standard operating procedures.

"There was a general failure ... there was a failure at the school of infantry, there was a failure by his staff, and he stands alone at this court martial to pay the ultimate price," Stevens said.

Before Arana read his statement, the defense called two sergeants who had served with Arana when he was a platoon commander and lieutenant. Both said they never saw Arana mistreat his troops.

"I believe he's an excellent leader," Sgt. Eric Cline said. "I would serve with him in any capacity, in combat or otherwise."

Dogs, owners win treats, medals at races to benefit training service

By BEN HOPPER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Chilly weather Saturday did not discourage runners and their dogs from participating in the 5th Annual Dog and Jog. "We had a lot of people, about 250, even though it was a little cold," said Becky Graf, third-year veterinary student and co-chairwoman of the event. "About 50 percent had dogs — a lot of people had two."

Runners and their dogs could run in the 10-kilometer, 5-kilometer or the family fun run.

Brian Houston, emergency medicine student at Barton County Community College, won the 10-kilometer race with his dog, Polo.

Houston, a former high school cross country runner, said his 2-year-old blue Doberman loves to run.

"We run four times a week. This was just something fun," Houston said.

Houston and Polo received a medal, plaque, box of treats and a free dog bath for the victory.

Megan Murphy, junior in horticulture, and her parents raise and sell registered golden retriever dogs near Hope, Kan.

She also has trained dogs for the Kansas Specialty Dog Service.

Murphy's brother and sister ran in the family fun run.

Her brother, Dave Murphy, won the children's fun run.

The KSDS, a non-profit organization out of Washington, Kan., started in 1990.

"My roommate is in the vet school," Murphy said. "I came out to support KSDS and the vet school."

Graf said the event not only raises money for KSDS, but also creates awareness for the organization.

"Without the assistance from these dogs, disabled people couldn't live the life they are able to lead," Graf said.

The KSDS raises and trains service dogs for the disabled and guide dogs for the blind, said Debbie Tegehoff, an apprentice guide-dog trainer.

"Foster families get a puppy when they are 8 weeks old to raise them for 12-18 months," Tegehoff said.

Foster families take the dogs everywhere with them, and the puppies wear capes to indicate that they are training. Then, the puppy returns to KSDS for extensive training in the Canine Housing Unit.

Michelle Woerner, unit coordinator, said there are 40 dogs in the housing unit and 40 puppies being raised.

"We have graduates in 27 states and puppy raisers in seven," she said.

The Dog and Jog was sponsored by the College of Veterinary Medicine and the Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital.

The event raised $1,400 for the KSDS.

Committee rewords proposal supporting lifetime driver's license ban after DUIs

By CARL MANNING
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — As some lawmakers see it, Attorney General Carla Stovall's proposal to impose lifetime bans on drivers' licenses for habitual drunken drivers is an idea that sounds good but is flawed in reality.

"Suspensions don't stop people from driving — I don't care how hard you make it — just like Prohibition didn't keep people from drinking," said Senate Majority Leader Tim Emert. "There's been no clamor for changes in the DUI laws."

Emert also is chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which reworked a proposal from Stovall that calls for stiffer penalties for those convicted of driving under the influence.

"Overkill is as good a term as any," Emert, R-Independence, said. "We have adequate punishment now."

Besides, Emert added, such a proposal doesn't take into account cases of people who once had drinking problems but sobered up.

Siding with Emert was Sen. John Vratil, who said, "I think it was extremely harsh and unreasonable to suspend somebody's license for life."

"It cannot be enforced. If you've lost your license, what do you have to lose? It's the death penalty for drivers," Vratil, R-Leawood, said.

A first DUI conviction now means a 30-day license suspension followed by a 30-day restricted license.

A second conviction within five years earns a one-year suspension and a third conviction means a three-year suspension.

Stovall proposed increasing the lengths of license loss, from one year for the first conviction to a permanent revocation for the fifth conviction.

The lifetime revocation idea came from a 1998 task force studying DUI laws. Sen. Lana Oleen, a task force member, said Stovall was delivering on a promise to present the panel's proposals to lawmakers.

Oleen, R-Manhattan, led a Judiciary subcommittee that dumped the harsher penalties and added changes the committee endorsed. Lawmakers expect to debate the bill after lawmakers return April 26 from their spring break.

One change allows the Department of Revenue to conduct administrative revocation hearings by telephone or video conference.

Sheila Walker, Division of Vehicles director, said revocation hearings are conducted in the county where the offense occurred, or in an adjoining county.

"If we could do them by telephone or video, it would help the customer and we are supportive of that," she said.

Another provision plugs a legal loophole on suspending licenses of underage drinkers.

The law requires an automatic one-year suspension for drivers younger than 21 with a blood-alcohol level between 0.02 percent and 0.079 percent. At 0.08 percent — the legal limit for DUI — the law calls for up to a one-year suspension, but allows the judge to reduce that to 30 days.

A youngster might actually drink more to get past the automatic one-year suspension level. The Senate committee proposed such drivers get at least a 60-day suspension and up to one year at the judge's discretion.

"The potential does exist, and we are aware of it happening on at least one occasion," Walker said.

Lifetime suspensions and the other stiffer penalties were removed from the bill by committee members who thought penalties already are strong enough.

In 1999 there were 6,558 DUI convictions in Kansas, compared to 7,607 in 1998; 7,919 in 1997, and 8,722 in 1996, Walker said. For January and February, there were 1,109 DUI convictions, out of 1.9 million licensed drivers.

Oklahoma joins Kansas as butt of nation's jokes

Kansans owe the Oklahoma House of Representatives a big "thank you."

The Oklahoma House deserves gratitude not for making a wise decision, but for taking Kansas out of the limelight as the nation's most prominent backward-thinking, evolution-denying state.

The Oklahoma House passed legislation Wednesday that would require public schools' textbooks to recognize "that human life was created by one God of the universe."

The creationism issue was brought to the House's attention by an amendment pertaining to the State Textbook Committee. Last year, the committee mandated that biology books have a disclaimer that described evolution as a "controversial theory."

The House also approved legislation that allows the State

Textbook Committee the authority to insert a one-page disclaimer to this effect.

This frightening turn away from science follows in the steps of a decision last year by the Kansas Board of Education that drew sharp criticism for ignoring scientific research in favor of making the teaching of evolution an optional part of the curriculum for the state's schools.

Although evolution and the creation of the universe certainly are controversial issues, backing away from the teaching of science to appease citizens of conservative states is the wrong thing to do.

Neglecting to teach children theories that are accepted widely and based on science will put those students and the states in which they reside at a disadvantage.

Even if those theories someday are proved incorrect, it will take scientific knowledge and experience to do so.

The Oklahoma House's decision was the wrong one, and deserves to be scoffed at by all — except Kansans.

At least Kansans no longer will be the butt of the nation's jokes.

INFANTICIDE SOLUTION: ABANDONMENT PROTECTION

Dropping abandonment laws severs parental rights, could save babies

America is facing an epidemic. More and more teen-agers who are having children are resorting to infanticide for some reason or another.

Infanticide, for those of you who do not know, is the murder of a baby after he or she is born. For example, the Junction City couple who just finished their trial was guilty of infanticide. The young mothers who throw away their babies are guilty of infanticide.

Laws punishing abandonment of babies are one reason for the rise of this epidemic. In most places in America, it is against the law to drop your child off at a hospital.

If a mother has an emergency, sets her child down and leaves, she can be charged with the crime of abandoning her child. Thus, some mothers are so desperate and panicked that they respond simply in the only way they can think of.

Infanticide is not right, but desperation drives people to do astonishing things. If America would drop its abandonment laws, there would be a more obvious and more responsible alternative out there for panicked mothers.

I heard on the radio the other day about a German policy that tries to curb the epidemic of killing your own children. They set up drop boxes, sort of like mailboxes for babies.

The boxes are heated like an incubator and are equipped with an alarm that goes off when the box is filled. The alarm sounds at a nearby fire station or hospital where an employee immediately picks up the child. The mother never is seen nor known.

Although this particular system might not be the best solution, it is at least an attempt to save children's lives. Americans are undergoing a debate to decide whether implementation of something like this would be beneficial in the United States.

A lot of people are opposed, noting it as cruel and irresponsible. However, the contrary is true. It is cruel and irresponsible to throw your child away. It is cruel and irresponsible to suffocate a baby simply because you do not want it.

I say that, although the issue of what to do with the child should have been thought about before its birth, it is more responsible to leave a live baby in a safe place than to leave a dead baby anywhere.

At least with this system, parental rights can be severed immediately, and the child is free for adoption. And, though sad, babies are wanted by adoptive parents more than any other age of children.

True, the parents or parent have nine months to decide what to do when the baby is born, and the most responsible thing to do is to make a decision as soon as possible.

But there have been cases of young women who honestly claim they did not know they were pregnant. When they are struck with labor pains, they have the child and panic. These cases often times result in infanticide, though not always. For these women, and those who simply waited too long, there should be an alternative available.

We offer women solutions for unwanted pregnancy that deal with the issue during the pregnancy itself, but no options are available after the birth, for adoption needs to be addressed early on in order to find a good family.

Though the German drop-box idea might not be the answer for the United States, a solution needs to be found to aid mothers after a birth. If abandonment laws were disposed of in these cases, more opportunities for a better life would be available for the mother and the child.

Hard work, integrity secrets of America's millionaires

Who wants to be a millionaire? I'm not talking about an overrated show where Regis Philbin asks people unchallenging questions. I mean for real, a net worth of $1 million or more.

In his recent best-selling books, "The Millionaire Next Door: The Surprising Secrets of America's Wealthy" (with William Danko, Ph.D.) and "The Millionaire Mind," Thomas J. Stanley, Ph.D., reveals the results of his extensive research on America's wealthy. How they made it to where they are today and what kind of people they are might surprise many readers.

There are more than 3.5 million millionaires in America today. How many are lottery winners, professional sports players or star entertainers? As a percentage, virtually zero.

More than 80 percent inherited less than 10 percent of their wealth; more than half never received a single dollar in inheritance. A high proportion are first-generation immigrants.

More than 80 percent of them are college graduates and 38 percent have advanced degrees, although some were high-school dropouts. Of those who aren't retired (four-fifths of them), about two-thirds are self-employed as business owners, entrepreneurs or professionals. The remaining third have a wide variety of occupations — senior corporate executives, sales professionals, engineers, architects, professors, even teachers. They have a median income of $131,000; an average home value of $320,000; and a median net worth of $1.6 million.

To what do they credit their success? The top-five cited factors are the following: "Integrity — being honest with all people;" "Discipline — applying self control;" "Social skills — getting along with people;" "A supportive spouse;" and "Hard work — more than most people." Among the least significant factors listed were attending a top-rated college, being lucky, graduating at or near the top of one's class, investing in the stock market or having a high IQ. Honesty and integrity were cited frequently as being most important, and being willing to take risks to succeed also was mentioned frequently.

In fact, many of them were told, at one time or another in their lives by some authority figure, that they lacked the ability to be successful. Three commonly cited factors in the success of millionaires are the following: "Determining that hard work was more important than genetic high intellect in achieving;" "Never allowing poor grades to destroy your goals to achieve;" and "Learning to fight for your goals because someone labeled you as having 'average or less' ability." As for luck, Stanley writes: "Countless millionaires have told me they are lucky to live and work in America. ... Yes, luck does play some role, but most economic success derives from proactive behavior.

"The typical millionaire couple in America has been married for 28 years. One in four have been married for 38 or more years."

That's far better than the average American couple. What initially attracted them to their spouse? The two least-mentioned qualities were "high income potential" and "wealthy." The top four qualities the men mentioned were cheerful, encouraging, well-dressed and virtuous; the top four cited by women were ambitious, self-disciplined, cheerful and secure. Most millionaires attributed a great portion of their success to their spouse's support; on the other hand, divorce tends to wreak financial havoc on all parties involved.

Millionaires also tend to be frugal. Says Stanley, "Moderation in consumption and a healthy, disciplined lifestyle are the hallmarks of the affluent in America." Few of them own high-limit credit cards or shop at upscale stores. In fact, one of the most common places to shop was JCPenney. Most of them drive used cars.

A survey found that in a typical month, the top three activities for millionaires were socializing with children or grandchildren, entertaining close friends and planning investments. On a yearly basis, the No. 1 activity was consulting with a tax expert, and raising funds for charity also ranks high. As Stanley puts it, "The typical millionaire is, in three words, a cheap date!"

The most telling of all, however, was the contrast between those Stanley defined as prodigious accumulators of wealth and under-accumulators of wealth. PAWs love their work; UAWs are driven to work by a need to consume and the burden of excessive debt. PAWs invest their money, while UAWs spend it. PAWs need to achieve, while UAWs need to buy, have and impress others. PAWs have financial goals and a budget; UAWs often have neither.

In the case of PAWs, many people wouldn't guess they are millionaires. On the other hand, everyone thinks the UAWs are millionaires, but most aren't. In fact, Stanley found that there are millions of households with annual incomes of more than $100,000 that are living hand-to-mouth; they have no real wealth. They spend everything they earn and then some. PAWs, in contrast, tend to have little or no debt and are financially secure.

Perhaps the best summary would be this: UAWs serve money. They are controlled by possessions.

On the other hand, for PAWs, money serves them. They don't define happiness in terms of possessions, status or highly expensive recreational activities. They seek to be financially secure and achieve their goals, but they realize that the best things in life are either free (in terms of money) or relatively cheap. Health, happiness, achievements, friends, integrity, honesty and family — these are the things that PAWs tend to value.

Obviously, not everyone is capable of attaining a net worth of $1 million or more. Although I don't believe wealth is the definition of success, being secure financially is certainly part of it. Everyone can benefit from the life lessons of the average millionaire.

Work hard, live below your means, treasure your integrity, preserve your marriage, do what you love and never let anyone tell you that you lack the ability to succeed.

Lawrence 8th grader wins state bee

Will Brubaker, an eighth grade student from Central Junior High in Lawrence, won the 2000 Kansas Geographic Bee on Friday.

Brubaker's win enables him to go to the National Geographic Bee, May 23-24 in Washington D.C.

"The first-place winner automatically won a trip to Washington D.C.," said Marilyn May, media contact for the Kansas Geographic Bee and graduate student in education. "A teacher is also sent."

Brubaker was one of 100 students ranging from fourth to eighth grade who participated in the state competition, which took place in the K-State Student Union.

May said 5,000 students and 365 schools were involved in the competition. These students were narrowed down to the 100 who competed in the state competition through geographic bees at their schools and a written test.

At the state competition the winner received a $100 scholarship, the second-place winner received a $75 scholarship and the third-place winner a $50 scholarship.

The winner of the National Geographic Bee will win a $25,000 scholarship.

Students who placed in the top three received map packets, which included world maps and desk references. Denise Salisbury, graduate student in education, said.

"The first-place winner also got an atlas," Salisbury said.

Salisbury said students prepare for the competition in a variety of ways. She said they read magazines, participate in school competitions and submit written tests to the National Geographic Bee.

During the preliminaries, competitions was spread between four rooms. Only three students answered all the questions correctly in the preliminaries. Those students were automatically sent to the final round.

Seventeen students competed in a tie-breaker for the seven places remaining in the final round.

Ben Smith, co-coordinator of the Geographic Bee, said judges came from a variety of places, including Kansas City, Fort Hays State University and K-State.

"Judges were professional geographers and geographic educators," Smith said.

The competitions have been taking place for the past 11 years. Smith said the questions the students are asked cover a variety of subjects.

Students who lose sometimes feel a little disappointed, but Smith said that is to be expected. He said it is a positive experience.

"They thoroughly enjoy and get excited about the competition," Smith said.

KU student killed in car-train collision

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — A University of Kansas student was killed and two others injured early Saturday when a passenger car collided with an Amtrak train east of Lawrence.

Authorities said Ryan James Travis, 19, of Beresford, S.D., was pronounced dead at the scene. His roommate, Jeffrey James Mitchell, 19, also of Beresford, was taken to the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., where he was listed in critical condition.

Another passenger, Johnson County Community College student Nathan Charles Roy, 20, of Stockton, was taken to Overland Park Regional Trauma Center, where he was in fair condition Saturday afternoon.

The accident occurred shortly after 1 a.m. just east of the city limits on a paved road in an agricultural area.

Douglas County Sheriff Cpl. Gayland Guinn said a westbound car pulled in front of the westbound train approaching Lawrence.

"Witnesses at the scene said the car came to a stop at the down cross arms, and for whatever reason went around them and was struck by the train," Guinn said.

The car was spun off the side of the road and the Chicago to Los Angeles Southwest Chief safely came to a stop, Guinn said.

There were no injuries to passengers or crew. The train passes through the city each morning, making stops at the depot in downtown Lawrence.

The train was released from the accident scene after a couple of hours, Guinn said.

Guinn said no alcohol containers were found at the scene, but he said at least one of the victims had been drinking. The crossing is marked with crossing arms, lights and bells.

The accident is being investigated by the Douglas County Sheriff's office and Burlington Northern Santa Fe, which owns the tracks.

Guinn did not know how fast the train was traveling, but said that it was approaching an area where it begins to slow down.

Chancellor Robert Hemenway offered condolences Saturday on behalf of the university.

"Our hearts go out to the parents, families and friends of these young men," he said. "Nothing saddens the KU community more than the news of a tragic accident like this, involving students so young and full of promise."

Political party seeks support for ousted leader

By ALI ZERDIN

LJUBLJANA, Slovenia — The political party that caused Slovenia's government to collapse began seeking support Sunday for its decision to back the outgoing defense minister as the nation's new prime minister.

The government in this Balkan republic collapsed Saturday after Premier Janez Drnovsek failed to win a confidence vote for a Cabinet reshuffle. The no-confidence vote effectively ousted Drnovsek and left parliament with the task of finding a new prime minister within 30 days.

The reshuffle became necessary after the conservative People's Party withdrew from the ruling coalition with Drnovsek's Liberal Democrats and indicated they would form a right-leaning alliance with the opposition Christian Democrats.

"The time has come to bring an end to the left-wing option," Marjan Podobnik, the president of the People's Party, told a local radio station in Cerkno, his hometown, about 40 miles west of Ljubljana, the capital.

"I am confident that we will form a new coalition government as many parliamentary parties have already expressed interest in cooperating with us," Podobnik said.

He said he expected to gain up to 50 votes in the 90-seat parliament, which would enable Demsar to become the next leader.

If parliament fails to find a replacement for the 49-year-old Drnovsek, President Milan Kucan must call parliamentary elections, scheduled for around November, to take place no later than mid-July.

Valentin Hajdinjak, the spokesman for the Christian Democrats, said Sunday the party was willing to support Podobnik's initiative but was still negotiating details. The Social Democrats also have expressed support.

Demsar, 40, was unreachable for comment Sunday.

Still, some analysts doubt that Podobnik can muster a majority in parliament required to form a new government.

The People's Party hold 19 seats in the legislature. The Social Democrats control 16, while the Christian Democrats hold nine.

"I don't believe Podobnik will gather 50 votes," said independent analyst Spomenka Hribar. "He might be able to sway the required majority of 46 hands, but only through a shady deal with the extremist National Party."

Zmago Jelencic, the controversial leader of the National Party, said he would cede three votes to Podobnik if he were guaranteed the post of minister of internal affairs.

Grega Repovz, a political analyst with the daily Delo, said the current stalemate is Slovenia's biggest political crisis since it won independence from the former Yugoslav federation in 1991.

Coach Clark should garner awards for his patience

K-State head baseball coach Mike Clark deserves a lot of credit. He should be garnering all kinds of awards right now, like the nicest coach award, teamwork award, the no-excuses award.

An award that signifies a person who is completely giving, doesn't complain when things don't go his way.

That is the award he deserves. Clark seems to have one main virtue — patience.

All Clark really wants is for the stadium to be completed. He deserves to have his program given the same respect other athletic programs receive.

He deserves a stadium that is built on a budget and doesn't rely upon gifts in kind to be completed.

In spite of the successful weekend, the program would be in such better shape if the stadium were completed.

As of last week, the project still needs to raise an estimated $250,000 to complete the stadium.

So where are the alumni? Why haven't some of the heavy financial hitters stepped in to help finish the stadium?

It really doesn't make sense that they wouldn't. Perhaps they don't necessarily enjoy baseball. That is their prerogative, but they need to remember that an organization — whether it is a newspaper, an Interfraternity Council, a fast food restaurant or the K-State Athletic Department — is only as strong as its weakest link.

As long as "The Frank" remains incomplete, all the programs suffer.

The football program and other sports suffer because an unfinished stadium looks bad to recruits and those people looking to link up with Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

The unbuilt stadium is hindering a lot of K-State baseball players' collegiate careers. They are forced to play in inadequate facilities and dream of the future.

Picture a coach taking players on a tour of the K-State campus. They see the squirrels, the technology, a beautiful library and exclusive Pepsi products scattered all around.

Then they come to the baseball stadium and are told that it should be completed sometime in the future.

It is imperative, because if you want to keep K-State football on top, and the basketball programs' futures are important to you, then K-State administrators need to get the stadium built the right way. It is a matter of necessity, a quality baseball stadium would send the right message to recruits.

A person has to feel for those players who are fighting the good fight. They are doing what the baseball team always does — making the most of a bad situation.

It is really too bad. Clark is a classy guy and shouldn't have to take this. The stadium needs to be finished, and the money needs to be raised.

Now, one could argue that if you look at setting goals over a period of time, that the program has made significant strides in building the stadium from where it was a year ago. Last year there was not a home field and Cats were truly road warriors, so it could be worse.

Still, the situation could be a lot better.

The program and the stadium are still falling short — $250,000 short.

TOP LEFT: K-State's Benton Olen is congratulated as he rounds third base after hitting a three-run homer in the 8th inning of Sunday afternoon's game. K-State beat the Cowboys, 2-1, in the weekend series for the first time since 1977. TOP: K-State's Chad Tabor slides safely into home plate as Oklahoma State's Darren Hall fails to come up with a throw from the outfield. K-State won the game, 14-7, and the weekend series, 2-1.

The K-State Wildcats defeated the Oklahoma State Cowboys 14-7 Sunday at Frank Meyers Field to win the three-game series.

In fact, the series victory, which includes the Cats' 15-9 win Saturday, was K-State's first over the Cowboys since 1977.

"Guys have stepped up," K-State head coach Mike Clark said. "This is just one weekend, but it's definitely something we can build on and hopefully put a nice stretch together when we get back into conference play."

Leading the contest 8-7 in the bottom of the seventh with two outs, runners on first and second, K-State's junior pinch hitter Kelvin Day doubled to score both runners and put the Cats up 10-7. However, the Cats weren't finished yet. Senior Chad Tabor tripled home Day to pad the once one-run lead.

"That was huge," Clark said of Day's two-run double. "Kelvin's been having some awfully good strokes in batting practice. We love his aggressiveness."

"What a momentum shift. They come back with two runs and then he busts that thing open, and the gates open, and the momentum's back for us."

K-State (11-20, 3-14), led the entire game, and controlled early on as the Cats got three quick runs on the Cowboys (19-14, 6-9) in the first inning.

Tabor, who was 2-for-4 with two RBIs, started things by drawing a walk and then was brought home on the bat of junior left fielder Kasey Weishaar, who doubled. Junior first baseman Mark English then singled home Weishaar from second. Junior shortstop J.D. Loudabarger capped off the inning with an RBI single.

Until the fifth, K-State's senior pitcher Jason Wells had managed to put together a quality outing, allowing just one run on three hits to Oklahoma State.

In the fifth, the Cowboys' bats erupted as they scored four runs on three hits, combined with two walks surrendered by Wells.

After retiring the first two batters, Wells (2-5) got into a jam by giving up a double, a walk, a single, a walk and a triple consecutively before finally putting away the Cowboys' senior second baseman Lance Smith with a flyout.

Wells, who was relieved in the seventh in favor of freshman right-hander Todd Lundwall, notched the victory with a six-hit, seven-run and eight-strikeout performance.

"Jason competed well," Clark said. "He had the one inning where I thought he backed down just a little bit. He got the first two guys out and then got a little passive."

"Maybe it was good for us to have a character check right after a big win. We could have just lied down, but the guys just kept after it."

Lundwall finished the game, giving up just two hits and a walk while striking out three in 2 2/3 innings.

In the eighth with the Cats leading 11-7, junior right fielder Ben Olen put the finishing touches on the Cats' victory with a three-run home run to left-center field, his second of the season.

"I knew it had a good chance," Olen said of his home run. "I wasn't sure if it was high enough. It was a good way to end the weekend series."

For K-State, which will be host to hosts three non-conference opponents before resuming conference action against Iowa State on April 22, getting hitting and pitching on the same page, while meeting challenges is key, Clark said.

"Hitting is one of those situations when if you can get a little momentum going, get some positive vibrations going, or thoughts going, it just kind of builds on itself," Clark said. "That's what has happened these last two days."

"When we were challenged we went out and created some offense and were aggressive."

Women's tennis team loses to OSU

By JUSTIN HAYWORTH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The K-State women's tennis team did something it hadn't yet done in conference play — it lost. On Sunday afternoon, the Cats lost their first Big 12 Conference match to Oklahoma State, 7-2.

The Wildcats lost five of the six singles matches against the Cowboys. K-State head tennis coach Steve Bietau said the Cowboys played a great match but that K-State missed some opportunities to stay in it.

"I thought we had a golden opportunity at No. 6, and we did very little to take advantage of that," Bietau said. "With that match and Eva (Novotna) still on, I thought we had a chance if we could get to the doubles."

The Wildcats' only other victory on the day came from the No. 3 doubles team of Kathy Chuda and Vesselina Jeliazkova, who defeated Dominika Olszewska and Cameron Stoudt, 8-5.

"We expected this match to be really tough, but I think they played better than we expected," Alena Jecminkova said.

Bietau said he thought this was the first real stinging defeat K-State had suffered. He also said OSU displayed great individual effort in each match.

"Where they didn't have great tennis, they had great effort," Bietau said. "We just didn't have the answer."

The loss to the Cowboys stopped the Wildcats' eight-match winning streak and their perfect start in the Big 12 this spring, leaving them at 7-1 in the conference.

In other action over the weekend, the Wildcats were able knock off Oklahoma 5-4. K-State won four of the six singles matches to maintain a comfortable lead going into the doubles matches.

In the doubles matches Oklahoma stormed back, winning both the No. 1 and No. 2 doubles matches and knotting the overall score at 4-4.

The No. 3 doubles team of Chuda and Natalia Farmer took to the court with the match on the line. They quickly set their intentions by jumping out to a 5-2 lead before going on to win the match for the Wildcats, 8-3.

Bietau said he was happy to get the win but was not happy with the team's performance.

"We have been operating on a thin margin of safety and playing extremely well," Bietau said. "Our level dropped a little bit in that match, and it showed."

K-State's Petra Sedimajerova returns a shot during her singles match Sunday afternoon against Oklahoma State at the Washburn Tennis Facility. The Wildcats lost to the Cowboys, 7-2, ending their eight-match winning streak and undefeated Big 12 Conference spring start.

U.S., China trade bill supporters optimistic

By TOM RAUM
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Despite labor's plans to protest one of President Clinton's top economic objectives this week, supporters of permanent trade privileges for China increasingly sense they will prevail.

"I think we have the momentum, frankly," said Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., after what proponents said was as one of their better weeks in some time.

They cited the setting of a House vote on the trade bill during the week of May 22, and the rhetorical restraint shown by Taiwan and, until recently, China, in the aftermath of Taiwan's presidential election last month.

Members of Congress spoke before Beijing stepped up pressure on Taiwan over the weekend by renewing its warnings against moving toward independence.

Labor organizations say 10,000 union activists will be in Washington this week to protest free-trade policies in general and the China bill in particular.

Joining environmentalists, students and others, they plan demonstrations to coincide with the annual spring meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. A Capitol Hill rally was set for Wednesday to protest the China trade legislation.

In advance, the AFL-CIO began running television spots for two weeks in Washington and New York to protest the trade bill. The ads include excerpts of an interview with Chinese dissident and former prisoner Wei Jingsheng. The labor federation also says it will show the ads in select congressional districts during the April congressional recess.

Bracing for this week's protests, congressional sponsors of the China trade bill said they are not underestimating their job in building support for the bill.

They hoped that House Speaker Dennis Hastert's setting of a date, well in advance of the summer political conventions, would help speed the bill's passage.

Also, Beijing's reluctance until recently to intensify, or even to reiterate, its threat to use force against Taiwan if the island's government continued its resistance to reunification talks had helped calm congressional worries about a confrontation between China and Taiwan.

The restraint had made it less likely that the Senate would attempt to combine the China trade measure with a contentious bill to increase U.S. military ties with Taiwan. Such a linkage could have undermined support for the trade bill.

Compared to the difficulties faced in the House, Senate passage of the bill is "a slam dunk," Baucus said. The Senate is expected to begin debate on the bill later this month, long before the House debate.

House Democratic Whip David Bonior predicts that as many as 150 of the House's 211 Democrats will vote against the trade bill. So far, he has been able to come up with the names of only 19 Democrats who previously voted to give China annual trade benefits and now say they will vote no.

Bonior, D-Mich., is leading opposition among Democrats. House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., is officially undecided, while attempting to gather support for his own planned package of side agreements on proposed labor and environmental protections. The Clinton administration has warned that it will oppose putting conditions on China's trade status.

The bill would extend to China the same low-tariff access to U.S. markets enjoyed by almost every other U.S. trading partner. China already has this access, but it must be renewed annually. The bill would end these annual reviews and ease China's entry into the Geneva-based World Trade Organization.

Joining the White House are open-trade lawmakers and business groups.

Organized labor, environmental groups and some human rights organizations do not want to give up the leverage they contend they have over China with the annual reviews.

Rep. Robert Matsui, D-Calif., the top Democratic supporter of the bill in the House, hoped Hastert's decision to set a vote will coax wavering Democrats or at least guard against further defections.

Still, Matsui said in an interview, "I don't want to discount the difficulty."

Matsui predicts that between 70 and 80 Democrats will vote for the bill. While far short of the 90 to 100 votes that Republican leaders have challenged Democrats to produce, it could still lead to a victory — if the bill is supported by about 150 Republicans, as is generally expected. For victory, 218 votes are needed if all 435 House members vote.

"I think we can prevail," Matsui said.

Rep. David Dreier, R-Calif., chairman of the House Rules Committee and a leading supporter of the bill, also predicts ultimate victory. "I am very confident that we are going to win," Dreier said. However, he suggested, "Democrats are trying to have it both ways."

CIA dismisses official over Chinese embassy bombing

By JANELLE CARTER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Central Intelligence Agency has fired an employee whose inaccurate information led to the mistaken bombing of the Chinese embassy during the NATO war against Yugoslavia.

"We did sever ties with one agency employee," an intelligence official said Saturday night, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Six others, including a senior official and four managers, received administrative punishments that ranged from oral warnings to letters of reprimand. CIA Director George Tenet singled out for praise an official who expressed concern about the target early on, the official said.

CIA spokesman Bill Harlow issued a statement late Saturday confirming personnel action was taken but refused to make public details for reasons of security and privacy.

Blame for the accident was widespread, Harlow said. "Numerous CIA officers at all levels of responsibility failed to ensure that the intended bombing target ... had been properly identified and precisely located before CIA passed a target nomination package to the U.S. military for action."

"While we can never undo the mistakes that led to the bombing, we are satisfied that the CIA has stood up ... and taken appropriate responsibility for our mistakes," Harlow said.

The CIA actions initially were reported Sunday by The New York Times and The Washington Post.

U.S.-Chinese ties have been rocky since the inadvertent bombing last May, which occurred during NATO's 78-day air war. Three Chinese journalists were killed in the bombing and 20 other Chinese were wounded. The United States has said the embassy was targeted because of wrong information, but the intended target was the headquarters of the Yugoslav Federal Directorate of Supply and Procurement.

After the bombing, Beijing suspended military contacts and talks on human rights, arms control, security issues and China's entry to the World Trade Organization. Chinese government-run media said the bombing was intentional, and it caused protests at U.S. facilities in China.

MARCH

campus and in fraternities and sororities. And above all, we demand respect."

Beth Wanek, freshman in architecture, said Divine's speech demanded respect for women.

"We really do live in a sexist world — everything Divine said rang true," Wanek said.

Craig said she believed Divine's speech gave direction to the evening.

"Melissa's speech gave a lot of direction and helped to narrow the focus and to give women and the community who are not involved in OW an idea of what we hoped to accomplish," Craig said. "The speech was motivational for the march and for the future."

With 300 voices echoing off Hale and Denison Hall, Divine asked the crowd why they were there.

The crowd responded by saying, "Take Back The Night."

"Let's let the march begin," Divine said.

The women chanted the whole way as they walked around Eisenhower Hall, past McCain Auditorium, through the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art tunnel, across Bluemont Avenue, down 11th street to Morrow, through Aggieville and finally to Triangle Park.

For Craig, the march was an adrenaline rush.

"It was a thrill to be surrounded by a lot of people I love and care about," Craig said. "To be able to share it with them and women really gave me hope we can make a difference."

Kelsey Needham, junior in psychology, said it was great to be walking amongst so many vibrant, powerful, noisy, strong and unstoppable women at once.

"To be in the middle is an amazing experience," Needham said.

After the march, the women who walked and men who supported the march congregated in Triangle Park for the closing rally and listened to a free performance by the band Lushbox.

Divine said they wanted to end the march on a positive note, and the 10 visions that were read are what the women of OW want to make the world look like.

After the visions were read, Divine spoke to the crowd one Women participating in the Take Back the Night March make their way down More Street in Aggieville on Friday night. The march, which started at Hale Library, traveled through campus, along Bluemont Avenue to 11th Street and through Aggieville to Triangle Park, where the band Lushbox performed a free concert afterward.

last time.

"Folks, don't let this end tonight," she said. "Don't let this be all, and don't choose to give up. Carry this energy with us tonight, carry it past the fear, past everything we are told we can't do, and we can start realizing a world that can be."

Needham said she attended the march because she knows many women who have been raped.

"I know too many women who have had to be way too silent and who feel they can't be loud," she said. "It is hard because that is what they are supposed to do."

OW began planning the march in January, said Holly Burmeister, OW member and graduate student in English.

"We started right after winter break," she said. "We went to sororities, beauty colleges — we went everywhere to reach a wide range of women. Women know how serious a problem it is. We know someone who has been affected by violence and want it to end."

She said OW already has a date set for the march next year and that the group hopes it will be even bigger.

This was the sixth march that Burmeister has participated in, but she said this was one of the best.

"This ranks as one of the best marches I have ever been to, with diversity of women, the number and the energy given," she said.

Wanek said the diversity was incredible.

"Women from all walks of life, all different colors and flavors came. There were no specifics," she said. "It shows all kinds of women are affected by this epidemic. It is not just one color being assaulted, but all of us."

Senior-to-be linebacker Warren Lott said if it were up to him, Simoneau would get drafted No. 1 overall.

"I want him to make as much money as he can," Lott said. "He spent all those years at K-State, and I want him to make a lot of money. He was a leader on the team — on and off the field. He spent time with each one of us, even when he didn't have to."

Redshirt freshman linebacker Terry Pierce, a native of Fort Worth, Texas, said Simoneau's talent, athleticism and heart should appeal to NFL scouts.

"If what they say is true about the NFL Draft, then they go off of character," Pierce said. "And, along with his playing ability, Simoneau is going to go pretty high.

"He's a good person — he's fast and strong. I don't see how he couldn't go in at least the second round."

Pierce said Simoneau's fundamentally sound playing ability is something few linebackers possess these days.

"Technique wise, we all know that Simoneau is probably the best linebacker in the nation," Pierce said. "There's a lot of talent out there, but when it comes down to technique, he's one of the best linebackers I've ever seen."

Nevertheless, draft analysts' ratings of Simoneau have been somewhat variable.

Joel Buchsbaum, draft analyst for Pro Football Weekly, ranks Simoneau as the eighth-best linebacker in the draft. Buchsbaum rates him as the 49th-highest-rated player overall, with a shot at being picked as early as the second round.

However, in Mel Kiper Jr.'s 2000 Draft Update, Simoneau is listed as the potential 89th pick overall, to the Buffalo Bills.

Kiper predicted six linebackers would be selected in the first round and that Penn State star LaVar Arrington would be the No. 1 pick overall. In addition, Simoneau was listed as the 17th linebacker to be selected in the draft.

In fact, Kiper selected Simoneau as the 22nd-most overrated player in the draft.

However, several K-State players said they felt Simoneau is more underrated than overrated when looking at his effect on their lives.

"If I went through my whole experience with Mark, it'd take forever," Leber said. "He's really helped me grasp the game mentally. Physically, you've always got to go out there and play — but it's much more than that."

"You've got to think about every play and every situation, and that's something he helped me with. Just watching his work ethic and his leadership by example has helped me tremendously."

Simoneau's work ethic paid off at the NFL combine, where he ran the 40-yard dash in 4.60 seconds, bench-pressed 24 reps and had a 36-inch vertical jump.

He is the second player in K-State history to be elected team captain for three seasons and led the Cats in tackles in 1998 and 99. Simoneau has laid the groundwork for Pierce's future success at the linebacker position, Pierce said.

"We've gotten a chance to watch him and learn off him and that makes us a lot better players," Pierce said. "This year has definitely been a good learning experience because of people like Mark."

Although Simoneau will be gone next season, Leber said the K-State linebacking corps is as strong as ever.

"We've got a lot of guys coming back, hopefully with a lot more experience and knowledge that will guide us in the right path," Leber said. "We're still striving for that perfect season defensively."

"He wants us to go out and keep doing what we're doing. We're a hard-working group. We go out every day and try to improve — and he knows that."

Darin Golay, senior in human resource management, died Sunday evening at 5:45 in a car accident nine miles southwest of Larned, Kan., on U.S. Highway 56.

Golay was driving eastbound while returning to Manhattan. After swerving past the center line, Golay struck the rear of the semi-truck's trailer carrying eggs and produce. Golay was pronounced dead at the scene, said Mark Schloemer, undersheriff of Pawnee County.

According to the Pawnee County Sheriff's office, Golay had to be cut from the wreckage in order to be reached. There were no passengers, and the driver of the truck, Tedoro Taiz of Post, Texas, was not injured.

Jason Bruce, senior in elementary education, was a close friend of Golay's. Golay and Bruce played on the same intramural softball team.

"He was fun to hang out with," Bruce said. "We had some good times together. He was a nice kid."

Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life, said no plans were made yet for a memorial service.

Golay's funeral will be Wednesday or Thursday, Bruce said.

Past coach for Wildcats dead at 90

■ Gardner dedicated 11 years as K-State basketball coach.

BY NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A coaching legend passed away Sunday. Jack Gardner, the only coach to lead two different programs to the Final Four and a former K-State basketball coach, died on Sunday night of undisclosed causes. He was 90.

Jim Gardner, his son, said he had just celebrated his 90th birthday a couple of weeks ago and had had an enjoyable day. He said a variety of things contributed to his father's death. Gardner had broken his hip last October, and he had been in a lot of pain.

"Actually it is kind of a blessing. He had been ill for quite a while," Jim Gardner said.

Gardner has been called the coach who started the basketball tradition at K-State, taking the team to two Final Fours. He is credited with helping to build the Mike Ahearn Field House, and later he helped Utah build a similar complex.

His son said Gardner was inspirational while coaching.

"He was able to get people to follow him," Jim Gardner said. "When he went to K-State, KU was really good, and he was able to take a good player and make him great."

"He was a positive thinker who believed in what he was doing."

He preceded Tex Winter, Cotton Fitzsimmons and Jack Hartman. K-State Athletics Director Max Urlick called him a coaching legend.

"He was one of the legends here in basketball," Urlick said. "Our sympathies go out to his family and the hundreds of players he coached while he was here."

Gardner coached the Cats in two different stints: first from 1939 to '42 before serving military time, and in 1946, when he came back to campus and led K-State to two Final Fours.

In the 1950-51 season, K-State finished second in the NCAA Tournament. One of Gardner's dominant players on the team was Ernie Barrett, who now is known as "Mr. K-State" and the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics director of development.

Barrett described Gardner as an outstanding coach.

Volunteering reciprocal for Manhattan resident

Being actively involved in the community is important to Manhattan resident Aaron Barkey, but it is not an easy task.

Aaron was born with quadriplegic spastic cerebral palsy, which keeps him confined to a wheelchair and makes moving his body difficult, if not impossible, but that does not keep him from leading an active life.

Benjamin H. Stone, senior in pre-medicine and life sciences and president of Alpha Epsilon Delta, said he first met Aaron about a year ago when he began helping him out through a volunteer program with AED.

"Aaron needs constant assistance in order to live at home with his parents and do the things he wants to do," Stone said. "So through AED, we began sending K-State students over to help out his parents and to spend time with him."

Now, Stone said, the state of Kansas is threatening to take away two-thirds of the funding that Aaron and his family receives in order to spread the money out among other people with his condition.

"He will not be able to stay with his parents and go on living like he has if the funding is taken away from him," Stone said. "His parents cannot afford to take care of him like they need to if the funding is taken away."

Paul Barkey, Aaron's father, said the state has debated taking away some of the funding before, but the issue has recently come up again.

"We need all the support we can get," Barkey said. "From an economic standpoint, the program we run here at our home with Aaron costs about one-fifth of what the state would have to pay to care for him in an institution."

Barkey said Aaron would not be able to live the life he has lived so fully for 28 years if he was in an institution.

"Aaron is very active in the community and as a person," Barkey said. "He goes to Meadowlark Hills and spends time with the retired people as well as volunteers at our church and goes to the YMCA in Junction City for therapeutic swimming."

Aaron's religion is important to him, Barkey said, and he volunteers as much as he can at the Grace Baptist Church.

"Aaron volunteers at the church," Barkey said. "He goes with some of his care providers to our church quite a bit because he is very active within our church."

Stone said the reason he and other AED members feel passionately about Aaron being able to stay at home with his parents is because they have got to know him on a personal level.

"We started out by just wanting to do some community service," Stone said. "Many of us have gone over to help take care of Aaron and hang out with him and have found out that he is a really intelligent person, and it would be a tragedy if he could not live life like he wanted to."

Aaron Plattner, freshman in nutrition exercise sciences and associate member of AED, said he began volunteer work with Aaron and has thus become his friend.

"Last semester I used to go over every Monday night and watch Monday night football with him," Plattner said. "I have not been able to go over as much lately, but I like to go over and spend time with him and his parents."

Barkey said his son refers to the members of AED who come to visit him as his friends and looks forward to their visits all the time.

"My wife and I call them care providers, but he calls them friends," Barkey said. "They are a tremendous help."

Demand for football tickets not diminished despite price increase

BY TANNER EHMKE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student ticket sales have not dissipated despite an increase in the price of football tickets for next season.

"We don't expect any decrease at all," Max Urlick, K-State athletic director, said. "The response has been good so far."

Urlick said it was expected that the response would be similar to the increase in the price of tickets in previous years.

"Students have been ordering tickets and getting squared away for the season," he said. "People sense another strong team and are getting excited."

Bob Cavello, assistant athletic director of business operations, said ticket prices are increased based on the needs of the department.

K-State understands how price increases upset supporters, he said, but the supporters understand that in order to maintain a quality program, financial obligations must be met. Internally, the prices of tickets are increased.

"What is it going to take to sustain the program?" Cavello said. "We must be able to compete against other programs, like Nebraska. We have to do what's best for our program."

The last ticket price increase occurred in the 1997 season. Student ticket prices were raised from $12.50 per game to $26 per game. The purpose of the price-hike was to equalize the the price increase of students compared to the public, Cavello said. Student tickets had not seen a price increase for 10 to 20 years at that time.

However, student ticket prices have remained the same without any increases since the 1997 season, Cavello said. The total amount charged for season tickets is being raised from $98 to $100.

"We've seen the same cost for four years," Cavello said. "It's only a $2 bump in price."

ICAT tickets are sold out. In order to purchase seating in the ICAT section, students must buy the football-basketball combination tickets.

"There are plenty of GA (general admission) and ICAT tickets," Carol Adolph, athletic ticket manager, said.

The season will kick off at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City for the Eddie Robinson Football Classic in a game against the University of Iowa on Aug. 26. K-State students have 4,300 $20 tickets available. Public tickets cost $35.

Tickets must be ordered through the ticket office at Bramlage Coliseum and will be available for sale at the end of the month.

Adolph said students will be able to order their tickets through KATS later this month, as well.

Dentist suspended pending rulings in child-harm cases

NEWARK, N.J. — A state board Monday suspended the license of a dentist accused of holding five children down so hard while he worked on their teeth that he left them with broken bones and bruises.

Dr. Kevin Ward was barred from any contact with patients until his case is resolved. Hearings will take place on the allegations.

Patients' families have charged that the Union City dentist broke the leg of a 5-year-old boy, the thumb of a 10-year-old girl and the wrist of a 4-year-old girl over the past seven years.

Ward also is accused of leaving a 6-year-old and a 3-year-old with bumps and bruises in 1999.

Ward said he has restrained unruly, uncooperative children but followed guidelines set by the American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry.

"Dr. Ward has devoted his practice to caring for children," said his lawyer, John Dizzia. This is a handful of cases before the Board of Dentistry.

He is being sued by the parents of 5-year-old Mario Rivero, whose leg was broken Feb. 21.

Rivero's father, Mario, said that Ward told him he pressed down on the boy's leg after the child kicked him, and continued working on his teeth after he heard the bone snap. Ward suggested to the boy's mother that the boy see a doctor after depositing him in a chair in the waiting room, the elder Rivero said.

"This man had no sympathy. He had no expression. This man didn't have any worries at all," he said.

Bill for condom distribution stalled due to scheduling

TOPEKA — There will be no hearing after all for the high school seniors whose bill would have required condom distribution in schools.

The topic caused quite a stir in Frankfort, their rural town of 900, about 60 miles northwest of Topeka.

Government teacher Bruce Gunter in January assigned his class to find an issue that mattered to them and propose legislation that could help solve the problem.

They chose mandatory condom distribution at schools, once students had completed a sex education class. They researched the issue, drafted the bill and convinced their local House delegate, Rep. Bruce Larkin, to get it introduced.

House Education Committee Chairman Ralph Tanner set aside a day for a legislative hearing earlier this session. But Larkin, D-Baileyville, told him the students were not ready and could not come to Topeka until basketball season ended.

The bill was unlikely to make it out of committee anyway, but Tanner considered having an instructional hearing sometime this year.

He said last week, though, that even that wouldn't happen. Few, if any, lawmakers gave the bill a chance, considering its controversial nature.

"I simply have not had a chance to reschedule," said Tanner, R-Baldwin City.

Plus, there were more pressing matters that legislators had to consider, he said, among them Tanner's own education package and debate over the state budget.

That suits Gunter just fine. "We just kind of wanted the thing to die by this point," he said Monday.

The students, Gunter and the Legislature realized the bill was going nowhere from day one.

But Gunter said the students learned plenty about the legislative process, even if they didn't get to the actual hearing.

"They learned about a lot more, public opinion and the whole scope of politics," he said.

Survey finds more parents, children discussing drugs

NEW YORK — More parents are speaking frankly with their children about drugs, but many of them fear — incorrectly — that the message is not getting through, according to a study by the Partnership for a Drug-Free America.

The group's 12th survey, released Monday, found that 57 percent of parents said they have spoken with their children at least four times in the past year about drug use. Sixty-four percent said they have thoroughly covered the topic.

In 1998, just 44 percent of parents said they had spoken with their children at least four times.

Miracle Mile. K-State football coach Bill Snyder's quarter was among the many that added up to around $2,000.

This money was raised through the Miracle Mile, a fund-raising event sponsored by Theta Xi and Pi Beta Phi, and was given to the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Snyder placed the quarter, emblazoned with a Powercat, alongside many others that constituted a trail of about one mile during All-University Open House.

Jared Rose, sophomore in political science and Miracle Mile chairman, said there were three locations where people could place a quarter on the sidewalk: on a trail from Seaton Hall to Waters Hall, at the Veterinary Medicine Complex and at Durland Hall.

"This year we were more disappointed with the turnout at the open house," Rose said, who attributed this to the bad weather. "But overall, we were pleased with the support."

"It was a success, and I'm really happy with the houses' participation."

Lion attack. A caged circus lion snatched a 6-year-old boy from his father's arm, dragged him through the bars and killed him, police in northeastern Brazil said Monday.

Jose dos Santos Fonseca and his son Jose apparently got too close to the lions' cage during the Sunday night show of the Vostok Circus, Pernambuco State police said.

"He dragged my son away, and when I looked my son was in his mouth," a weeping Fonseca said in a televised interview.

Police and circus employees were unable to remove the body from the cage, which held four other lions.

Police then fired on the lions with rifles and handguns, killing three.

A circus employee who declined to be identified said in a TV interview that the lions were famished and had not been fed since Thursday.

The show was near Recife, about 1,160 miles northeast of Rio de Janeiro.

Wheat report. Winter wheat appears to be faring better throughout most of Kansas, although it is too early how much damage was done by last week's freeze, Kansas Agricultural Statistics said Monday.

In its weekly crop weather report, the agency said winter wheat condition continues to improve.

About 59 percent of the crop was ranked in good to excellent condition, up from the 54 percent just a week ago.

Workshop addresses substitute-teacher need

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the teacher is absent, a substitute means fun and games for some school children.

However, many local school districts are finding it difficult to hire qualified substitute teachers to fill gaps left by teachers taking leave for illness, pregnancy or other reasons.

Now, because of a training workshop being offered in conjunction with the Department of Educational Administration and Leadership, some K-State students can get the training necessary to help school districts in need, said David Thompson, chairman for the department of education administration and leadership.

"School districts use a lot of people," Thompson said.

"People need to be gone for various reasons, and the classes still need to be taught," he said. "This course is offered for anyone in substitute work or others who want to know about the legal issues involved with teaching."

Thompson said that under Kansas law, anyone who has a minimum 60 hours college credit is qualified to become an emergency substitute teacher with certain restrictions.

He said there are not enough people to fill substitute positions in some school districts because of the low unemployment rate.

"There is opportunity everywhere," Thompson said. "With the good, tight labor market, there is a lot of employment in the state, so many people leave the area to find a job."

Thompson said the course, offered in two sections, is based on legal issues facing substitutes, including sexual harassment, students with disabilities, school violence and student and teacher's rights.

The first section will be May 22-25 and the second June 5-8. Students can take both workshops and receive one to two hours credit.

Substitute teachers have the potential of making more than $50 a day.

"This will give future teachers an introduction into employment," Thompson said.

"If the school district chooses, they can then hire the person for an emergency substitute role who has gained an introduction into the educational system," he said.

Barbara Maughmer, coordinator of staff development for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said the school district was short on substitute teachers at the beginning of the year. Now, however, she said it has been able to keep substitutes in the area and is doing well.

"We have attempted to give ongoing professional development for the substitutes throughout the year," Maughmer said.

"In the past, we have not trained them other than a basic workbook and one in-service day. This new workshop will fit in nicely to what we are doing and therefore, help us keep substitutes available to the area schools," she said.

Bob Shoop, instructor for the workshop and professor of educational law, said there are many benefits for students who participate in the workshop. He said students who complete the workshop might receive added support when applying to become an emergency substitute within the five to six area districts that are in need of qualified applicants.

He said a similar class has been offered in the past, and participants will also gain knowledge on many legal issues facing teachers today.

"A number of school districts will give preferential treatment to those who have successfully completed the course," Shoop said. "This workshop is being offered because the school districts and the teachers want it. If it is successful, we will begin offering it on a regular basis."

On-camera, voice-over talent auditions offered by ECC

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Any student or member of the Manhattan community with dreams of media exposure soon will have an opportunity to take a small step towards stardom.

Jim Mock, manager of production services at the Kansas Regents Educational Communications Center, said they are offering open auditions for on-camera talent and voice-overs.

He said these audio clips and video cassettes then will be put in a library to be used when needed. The auditions are from 2 to 7 p.m. Thursday at Dole Hall.

"We keep the tapes in our library so when a project comes up, we can go to these sources and see who best fits our needs," Mock said. "This way, in both the short-term and long-term, we have different people and talents to fit to the project as needed."

Mock said it has been a couple of years since the last open audition took place.

He said there now are at least three projects in the making and, throughout the year, both local and national campaigns are available that need voice-over and on-camera talent.

Cindy Jeffrey, producer and director at the Educational Communications Center, said those interested in auditioning should contact the main office to schedule an appointment.

She said if there are any conflicts with the time on Thursday, contact the office and arrange a separate time to audition.

"People need to give us a call if they cannot make it so we can find out some other time for them to come in and read," Jeffrey said. "However, we probably will not have another open audition like this for a while."

Jeffrey said auditioners will be required to do two things — read copy in an audio booth and take directions and read from a TelePrompter.

She said this allows them to see who performs best in which medium.

"We want to make sure people can both take direction and read copy in different ways as well as reading copy in front of the camera," Jeffrey said.

"We want to see people do both things for future uses," she said.

Jeffrey said those who participate in the audition can get both experience in the field and payment for their work done as benefits.

She said it is important to use local talent because of the hidden talent in Manhattan and at K-State.

"There are lots of talented people here and we always like to use someone locally," Jeffrey said. "It is good experience for those going into theater and if they get chosen, it looks great on a résumé."

Mock said another benefit for those who want to begin a career in front of the camera or doing voice overs is creating examples of work they have done.

"For somebody who is new at doing something like this, it gives them the opportunity to create a résumé reel for work they have done," Mock said.

"They make money and gain résumé experience at the same time, so it is a good project for anyone," he said.

Former basketball coach leaves legacy of greatness

Jack Gardner's passing Monday meant the loss of a great man, an influential teacher and perhaps the best coach in K-State basketball history.

Though just coaching 11 seasons at K-State in the 1940s and 1950s, Gardner's 147-81 career record ranks third all-time at K-State.

He is in fact credited by some to being the coach that established K-State as a national power on the hardwood for so many years, a tradition that Fred "Tex" Winter and the late Jack Hartman continued for many years after.

Gardner's teams won three Big Eight Championships and Big Eight Holiday Tournament Championships, while finishing in the top-20 on two occasions, including a second place finish in the NCAA Tournament in 1951 when the Cats were 25-4, a season that many still view as the greatest season in school history.

Since Gardner took over as head coach of the Wildcats in 1946, K-State has finished at or above the .500 mark 46 times.

Gardner, who is enshrined in college basketball's Naismith Hall of Fame, and then-athletic director Mike Ahearn were the driving force behind the construction of Ahearn Field House.

After nearly a decade of attempts to persuade state legislators to build K-State a new arena to replace Nichols Gymnasium, Ahearn opened its doors to start the 1950-51 basketball season.

In a time of rebuilding the basketball tradition at K-State with the recent hiring of Jim Wooldridge, let's take time to remember the one who started it all and laid the foundation for the basketball success to come.

Americans should not allow petty politics to stand between father, son

America has proved it is dedicated to the fight for human rights.

America also has proved it is capable of becoming too involved and allowing some politically based decisions to get out of control.

The latest in the country's infinite involvement in everyone else's problems is not solely the responsibility of the American government, though.

Originating more than 20 years ago is what might be called a sincere, mutual dislike between Cuba and the United States.

The United States' sincere dislike of Cuba's choice of government — communism — is one I see not only as positive, but as essential.

Everyone who has taken a gander at a television in the past two months has seen images of Elián Gonzalez, the boy refugee from Cuba. Those who have taken a moment to look at this situation might agree that some stories are taken too far in this country.

The Elián situation is truly tragic — the death of a mother is nothing at which to poke fun. The part of the situation that has been suspiciously fabricated is where the father and the rest of the family are involved — where Elián's welfare and life are involved.

VIEWPOINT
TARYN FORT

This child is 6 years old.

When I was 6 years old, I was playing with my brother in the mud, naively enjoying the life of a child without a care in the world. I had no knowledge of international affairs. I had no clue of much beyond Saturday-morning cartoons and birthday parties.

But then again, I am American. Elián is Cuban. He has lived most of his life in a country ruled by a fierce dictator who manipulates his people with propaganda. Fidel Castro ranks near Saddam Hussein in the eyes of the U.S. government.

Cuba ranks low, too. The U.S. is the only country in the world that still has a formal embargo over Cuba.

So we come to the conclusion that Cuba is not exactly the happy land a 6-year-old child who has just lost his mother should be returned to.

I disagree.

This situation is out of control on every level. It easily is misinterpreted by the public because Elián is a child. Because this boy is being fought for on both sides of the issue, it might be difficult to understand the objectives of those sides.

It seems this has become the perfect situation at the perfect time for Cuban exiles living in the U.S. to take a stand against Castro. But this is occurring with the threat of severe violence and an upheaval of Little Havana in Miami.

An example of this can be found on every nightly news program. A few days ago, 100 demonstrators — led by the Cuban exile group Vigilia Mambisa — made their presence known.

Not only did they clog traffic in Miami, they did so with threats of turning Little Havana into another Waco.

Now what is tasteless and unnecessary about that?

Pretty much everything, in my book. How is it Elián's father — who supposedly wants the child to come back to Cuba with him — sparked a debate on whether he was violating Castro's communist regime within hours of arriving in the U.S.?

Bill Clinton has been constantly stammered for saying Elián needs to go back to Cuba. Even though I hate to say this, even George W. Bush agrees with me on this one. Elián should be sent home.

A peaceful hand-over is necessary for Elián. Cuban exiles are offering threats in an attempt to keep Elián away from what they say will be a violent return — psychologically and literally.

Elián should be sent back, and this saga that began far before anyone got into that boat should be given a rest.

The U.S. is full of children who are at risk of psychological and physical harm every day. I do not think every one of them will be cured by trips to Disney World and shopping sprees at The Gap.

Hoping to out-manuever the U.S. government simply is not the best choice for the Gonzalez family.

Hey, Roney: Nobody likes you.

You swear in your campaign manager into your old position, and he swears you into your new position. And there's no spoils system. Right.

What does it mean to kneecap someone?

I was just curious why Travis Weigel insists on crying like a little girl instead of actually taking some initiative himself and getting involved in student government and tackling some of those issues that he spoke about in his column.

If there's five Wildcats expected to be picked in the 2000 NFL Draft, it would be nice to actually know who the five were.

I don't know whose views "Our View" represents, but they sure as hell aren't mine.

K-State women want to take back the night. On a more serious note, I need to take back my movie rentals so I don't get a late fee.

Isn't infanticide just a late form of abortion?

I just wanted to congratulate the Sigma Chis for getting two of their members in the police reports last Friday. Good work, guys.

I just wanted to say that there's no government like no government.

If you're going to have five Wildcats expected to be in the 2000 NFL draft, you could've at least put all five of their names in there. How are we supposed to know who's who?

Can you please tell me the other four players that might be drafted in the NFL draft?

Thanks for the pig head on our front porch. Fear the wrath.

Does the designer for the Collegian read the stories before they write the headlines? Because the story at the bottom of Monday's front page was pretty pathetic.

Columnist finds himself completely swept up by fever of professional wrestling, although fake

"If you smell what The Rock is cookin'..."

No other phrase makes wrestling fans go nuts like this one.

College students, kids and white and blue collar workers fill stadiums and arenas to see The Rock, a.k.a. "The People's Champion," lay the smack down on unsuspecting World Wrestling Federation jabronies.

My roommates faithfully camp out in our living room and watch "Raw is War" on Monday nights.

They even saw the WWF in person when it last came to Kansas City, Mo.

It seems like everyone watches the WWF. I never did understand what all the hype was about until this semester.

As a middle school kid, I watched the WWF. I never was a "Hulkamaniac." I liked Hulk Hogan, but in order to be a true "Hulkamaniac," I think you had to own a red headband that said "Hulkster" on it.

The guy who I tuned in to see was the Ultimate Warrior. He was ripped, had cool face paint, and I went crazy when he shook the ropes in his Warrior-like fashion.

When I got into high school, my interest in professional wrestling died out, so I was surprised when I came to college and saw people my age still watching it.

For a while, people were into World Championship Wrestling and their marketing scheme affectionately known as the New World Order. The WCW and NWO have since faded away, and the WWF has regained the prominence it once had.

When I started living with my roommates this semester, I would come home on Monday nights, see them watching wrestling and go into my room without giving it a second thought.

One night, however, they were yelling about something, so I checked it out. I was hooked. Sure, professional wrestling is — for the most part — fake, but I quickly realized the reality of the violence isn't what draws people to watch it.

The wrestlers like to call it "sports entertainment," but when you strip it down to what it really is, it's nothing more than a soap-opera geared toward men — and it's awesome.

After my initial viewing of "Raw is War" in February, I found myself coming home Monday nights and watching wrestling with everyone else.

I knew I truly had been bitten by the wrestling bug when I came home late one night and watched on tape what I had missed just hours before.

My liking for professional wrestling greatly increased when "WWF Smackdown!" made its way into our house on PlayStation. I don't know how many hours I've logged on this game, pounding it out in the squared-circle with my created wrestler, "Postal" (who now is the European Champion). For some reason, this game never gets old.

"Wrestlemania 2000" was a little more than a week ago. I knew my roommates and several friends would be watching the all-day coverage, which showed highlights from every Wrestlemania, which started in 1985.

I had no intention of watching it. I had tests to study for and a million other things to do, but with one glimpse of the television, I sat myself down and watched.

I had so much to do that I told myself I wouldn't watch Wrestlemania 2000 when this year's event finally came on at 7 p.m.

I was undisciplined as usual and remained sitting in the same spot that I had been in all day.

Despite the fact that I was sacrificing study time, I definitely can say my time wasn't wasted.

The three-way ladder match that took place for the Tag Team Championship belts probably was the best match I've ever seen.

As I stated earlier, wrestling is — for the most part — fake, but do a front flip off of a 15-to-20 foot ladder and land on your back onto another wrestler, sending you both through a table, and try telling me that you were just acting.

This columnist definitely has caught the wrestling bug. While I might never get so into it that I buy T-shirts like two of my friends did, I will continue to enjoy it.

I don't know if a money-sucking marketing machine like the WWF should be worthy of my time, but one thing is for sure — watching it is a lot of fun.

Barkey said the AED members who come to help Aaron do many things that help him and his wife out besides just being companions.

"We have students that come and take night shifts watching Aaron," Barkey said. "We feed Aaron through a tube in his stomach at night, and there has to be someone there to monitor that and to make sure he gets turned over in the night."

Barkey said Aaron is fed through a tube in his stomach at night in order to free up some time during the day.

"It takes quite a long time," Barkey said. "We begin feeding at around 8 or 9 until it is done, and it frees up a lot of time for Aaron to do other things during the day."

Another task Aaron's care providers help with is his range-of-motion stretching exercises that are carried out when he wakes up and right before he goes to sleep.

John Sease, senior in biology, has been working with Aaron since September and said he does not think of himself as one of Aaron's care providers, but as one of his friends.

"I work with him about five times a week, and each night he brightens up my evenings," Sease said. "It makes my day better."

As far as Aaron's funding goes, Barkey said right now they are running an excellent program and that the Legislature should be able to find a way to keep the Medicaid funding coming.

"We need the funding that we have now," Barkey said. "We don't have the funding necessary to hire a full-time staff to take care of Aaron, so that is why the students that help us are so valuable."

Stone said AED is focusing on getting the word out about Aaron's situation so people on the K-State campus and in the community will talk to their state rep-representatives or senators.

"We need people to realize this is a serious issue and that Aaron deserves to go on living like he has for 28 years," Stone said. "We just want it vocalized so hopefully something will happen."

As for Aaron, Barkey said his son is a special person who touch-

"Being where he is now and being able to do the things he does and interact with who he does improves the quality of life for Aaron," Barkey said. "And I believe that he improves the quality of life for the people around him."

Annual airline-quality survey finds complaints getting worse

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The airlines spent a lot of time last year promising things would get better for their customers, but a new study suggests just the opposite occurred: Consumer complaints more than doubled.

"You can see that consumers are just fed up, fed up with poor service," Brent Bowen of the University of Nebraska at Omaha said in announcing the survey results Monday.

Consumer complaints were up 130 percent from 1998 to 1999, said Dean Headley of Wichita State University. They rose from 1.08 complaints per 100,000 passengers in 1998 to 2.48 per 100,000 last year.

Headley noted that improved Internet access made it easier to file complaints but said that could not account for such a large increase.

The annual report, based on data collected by the Department of Transportation, scores the air carriers on on-time performance, baggage handling, consumer complaints and denied boardings.

It found an overall decline in airline quality last year, with only baggage handling showing a slight improvement.

The airlines instituted a consumer bill of rights in December, after a year of pressure from Congress to improve service. A report to Congress by the General Accounting Office on how they are doing is scheduled for June.

Diana Cronan of the Air Transport Association, which represents the major airlines, noted that the airlines' voluntary customer-first plan was not put into effect until the end of the year.

"We really would like to see the results next year when the plan has been in place for a full year. We really do believe that things will be better," she said.

Southwest Airlines ranked best overall, as it did in 1997. Last year, the top spot went to USAirways, which fell to No. 6 this year.

This year, Continental finished second, followed by Delta, Northwest and Alaska Airlines. American was No. 7, followed by America West, TWA and United.

The report's only good news involved baggage handling. The study found that the industry mishandled 5.08 bags per 1,000 passengers in 1999, down from 5.16 per 1,000 a year earlier.

On the other hand, there was a drop in the portion of flights that arrived within 15 minutes of schedule. On-time performance slipped from 77.2 percent to 76.1 percent and denied boardings was virtually stable, edging from 0.87 per 10,000 passengers to 0.88.

The study was particularly critical of airlines for instituting what they called a series of anti-consumer rules designed to increase productivity.

These include tighter limits on carry-on bags, bans on carry-on food, not allowing a consumer to take an earlier connection when a seat is available and raising fees to change tickets.

"Soon, consumers will become driven by price and schedule only and regard airline loyalty as having no tangible value," the authors concluded.

The Department of Transportation, which independently reports on airline performance, found similar problems through February.

Consumers registered 1,999 complaints about the 10 largest carriers in February, slightly down from January but nearly double a year earlier.

It found that 74.8 percent of flights arrived on time in February — also slightly better than in January but not as good as 78.9 percent in February 1999.

The airlines had a mishandled baggage rate of 4.81 reports per 1,000 passengers in February, an improvement from a year earlier.

Headley acknowledged the new passenger bill of rights instituted by airlines late last year and allowed that change does take time. But, he argued, the steps promised by the airlines were things they should have been doing already.

The carriers pledged to be more forthright with passengers all the way through their travel experience. They promised to volunteer the lowest fares or cheaper travel options when people call for reservations and to give passengers at least 24 hours to cancel ticket purchases.

They also said they would update passengers at 15- to 20-minute intervals when there are delays.

K-State second baseman Chad Tabor watches the flight of a relay throw to first base for double play in a home game earlier this season. Tabor was named the Big 12 Conference player of the week after going 6-13 in the Wildcats series with the Oklahoma State Cowboys.

Winning ways

BY MIKE VIETTI

Cats rebound to take 2 of 3 games against Oklahoma State

After K-State dropped all three games against Texas Tech two weekends ago by scores of 9-2, 9-2 and 19-7, head coach Mike Clark felt that his team had quit competing, that it had lost its heart.

The Wildcats proved otherwise by taking two of three games from Oklahoma State last weekend, the first time that K-State (11-20 overall, 3-14 Big 12) had accomplished that feat since 1977.

As the Wildcats look to continue their winning ways against Bethany today at 2 p.m. at Frank Myers Field, the obvious question remains: what was the cure?

It wasn't yelling at the players or making them run wind sprints — just simple one-on-one meetings between each player and the coaching staff emphasizing individual and team goals, Clark said.

"In the Texas Tech series I was disappointed with the effort that we gave, and that was the first time this season that I'd seen that," said Clark, who earned his 650th career win with Sunday's 14-7 victory. "So I thought, let's give these guys some goals! — let's look at these short-term goals."

"I told them, 'once you reach this goal, we're going to have another meeting,'" Clark said.

A note to several players: keep your calendars open.

"I was looking this morning — we've got six guys that reached their goal this series," Clark said with a chuckle.

From the plate, senior second baseman Chad Tabor, this week's Big 12 player of the week, junior first baseman Mark English and junior shortstop J.D. Loudabarger effectively knocked around the Oklahoma State pitching staff.

English went 7-for-14 during the series with six RBI, four runs, two triples and a double. Loudabarger reached base in nine of 15 at-bats, also scoring four runs and driving in two Wildcats.

"We did a great job of having quality at-bats," Clark said. "Regardless of what was going on in the top half of the inning, we came back and always had positive at-bats in the bottom half of the inning."

From the pitching aspect, each of the Wildcats' starting pitchers lasted to the sixth inning. That had happened exactly 10 times before the Oklahoma State series with six of those courtesy of sophomore Luke Robertson, who started Friday's 8-4 loss to the Cowboys.

Even though K-State enters its conference break on a two-game winning streak, Clark said the non-conference games are still welcomed.

"What we're hoping is that it will allow us to throw some kids who need some time on the mound that will help us get deeper in the pitching staff," Clark said. "I don't think we're really looking at who we're really playing as much as how we're playing."

Hopefully, we'll continue the effort we gave these last three games through this stretch and build some momentum."

Tabor chosen as player of the week

BY MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

K-State senior second baseman Chad Tabor has been named the Big 12 Conference player of the week.

Tabor helped the Cats beat Oklahoma State twice over the weekend, something K-State had done only eight times in the last 76 meetings with the Cowboys.

The Wichita native went 6-for-13 during the series with seven runs, three RBI, three doubles and a triple. Tabor entered the series hitting at a .267 clip with his average now up to .288. He said he had been putting too much pressure on himself up to this point in the season.

"You can't press. I've been pressing all this year since it's my last year," Tabor said. "I just decided to relax this series."

Tabor also stole six bases in six attempts in the series giving him a team-leading 12 for the season and 34 in his career. With his next steal, Tabor will tie Dave Specht (1973-76) for 10th place on K-State's career stolen base chart.

The Campus High School graduate also leads the team in starts (30), at-bats (118), runs scored (27) and doubles (nine), while he is second in hits (34) and triples (2).

After hitting .163 as a sophomore starter in 1998, Tabor refined his stroke and hit .335 last year when he was one of two Wildcats to play in all 55 games. Tabor led the team in in stolen bases with 19 and tied for the team lead in runs scored (53) en route to earning honorable mention status by Big 12 coaches.

Columnist plans to avoid watching unpredictable NFL Draft days

Note to self: avoid this weekend's NFL Draft at all costs. I have absolutely no desire to watch.

None. Sure, I'll check the updates every once in a while to make sure that my name hasn't been called, but other than that, I'm staying the heck away. I know that if I start to watch I'll get way too involved and end up with my own mountain of player assessments and team analysis trying to determine which punter the Detroit Lions will take with their seventh-round pick, the same pick that they got when they traded some guy off their bench to the Oakland Raiders, so the Raiders can pick an unknown wide-out from Appalachian State.

I just don't want to watch superstar players smile awkwardly as they put on a tacky ball cap and try to look happy that they've just been picked by the Philadelphia Eagles.

I've already gorged myself reading the mock drafts of every second-rate writer in the land, and everyone has a different take. The reason?

Picking the draft is impossible. It's like trying to outrun a tsunami. You shouldn't even bother.

Even the self-ordained oracle of draft analysis himself, Mel Kiper Jr., promised that if he had 15 correct picks he would shave his head. And this is coming from a guy who eats and sleeps the draft. Mel is the draft. Teams ask him for advice, and he still can't provide a decent list.

With his approach to the draft, you'd think Mel Jr. was planning a weekend invasion of Normandy. He's got his own "War Room" complete with more computer connections than the Pentagon.

But no matter who is making the picks, the player list looks like a group of typographical errors. There's a Plaxico, Dez, Stockar, Bubba, LaVar, Marvel, Casey, Raynoch and Deltha. Not exactly a list fresh from the "baby names" handbook.

Last year Mike Ditka, the former coach of the New Orleans Saints, traded all of his draft picks, his Land Cruiser, his soul and his mom to the Redskins so he could select running back Ricky Williams.

This year's draft won't produce any antics like those given to us by Ditka. The biggest question in this year's draft may be whether a kicker, namely Sebastian Janikowski, will still be on the board when the second round rolls around. The biggest questions being posed around the Flint Hills are when will former K-State defensive end Darren Howard be picked up, and how long can teams continue to overlook K-State stand-out linebacker Mark Simoneau?

Howard is a definite first rounder. He'll have to contend with a few other stellar defensive ends, Courtney Brown and Shaun Ellis, but his stock is still very good. There are still several teams that have a real need for a defensive end with the type of speed and vision that made Howard legendary at K-State.

Simoneau is a tough one to pick. He's listed as high as the second round and as low as the sixth. To draft pundits, the explanation is easy: Simoneau doesn't have the size to be an impact player at the rigorous position of middle linebacker. That's no surprise to Simoneau whose size has a battle for him at every level. Of course, his statistics haven't seemed to take notice of his size.

The other big question is whom the Cleveland Browns will pick with their No. 1 spot. The overwhelming favorites are Penn State DE Courtney Brown and Florida State wide receiver and felon galore Peter Warrick. The take on Warrick is that he has fantastic hands. And it's true. Heck, the surveillance cameras even show the ease with which Pete picked up the Dillard's bag and walked out of the store. He made it to the exit totally untouched.

And teams won't have to worry about a Peyton Manning-esque holdout when it comes time to sign Mr. Warrick. The guy is no spendthrift. He is a tried and true bargain shopper who would undoubtedly take a little less cash. I say, "who needs cash when you've got friends?"

Don't worry about ego. No sir, this guy is all id and superego. Did you notice how many times he deferred to his teammates after a catch or how he shied away from the limelight?

I don't know about you, but I see the total package here. A total package that comes gift-wrapped. They do that free of charge at Dillard's. That's what Peter told me anyway.

So when you're sending out the handwritten invitations to your draft party you can leave me off of the guest list. You'll get no RSVP from this guy. I'll be to busy trying on new ball caps and practicing my fake smile. Teams get so desperate in the seventh round I just might need that smile. And a plane ticket to Buffalo.

K-State track on course

■ Jumpers, throwers led way during last weekend's meets.

By MICHAEL NOLL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The K-State track teams finished one lap of the relay circuit last weekend and is in preparation for round two.

Last weekend the team was split between the Texas Relays and the Emporia State Relays. In each meet, K-State was led by different areas. At Texas, the team was led by the jumpers, and at Emporia, the throwers led the way.

In Texas, high jumpers Terresha DeRossett and Erin Andersen placed first and second respectively in the high jump in the "B" section but would have placed well in the "A" section, head coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"If they had been in the 'A' section, they would have third or fourth," Rovelto said.

Andersen also continued her impressive improvement in the pole vault with a second place finish and a personal best vault of 13 feet 7 inches. The vault, an NCAA automatic qualifying mark, was not as high as Andersen can go, however, Rovelto said.

"She broke the old old meet record, so it was a very good jump," Rovelto said. "But she didn't jump as well as she can jump. That's good that she can not jump her best against a very good field and still place second."

In the relay events at Texas, the Cats ran well but just not good enough to make the finals, Rovelto said.

"In the men's medley, everybody ran like they're capable of running, they just didn't make the finals," Rovelto said.

In Emporia, the throwers dominated the field by taking all but two top four finishes in discus, shot and the hammer throw. These results are somewhat misleading, however, because of the level of competition, Rovelto said.

"The places don't mean a whole lot to me. They quality of competition has a lot to do with where they place," Rovelto said. "For the most part, they did well but quite frankly there was not a lot of competition."

The Cats did still clean up the field. Rebekah Green finished first in the discus Crew takes 2 of 6 races in tri-dual

By DEREK BOSS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

It was two contrasting days for the K-State women's rowing squad last weekend.

The Wildcats got off to a good start Saturday but plummeted in day two of the Davis, Calif., tri-dual.

In day one of the competition, K-State won two of three from Stanford and Sacramento State. The Cats' lone losses came in both First Varsity Eight races.

"The First Varsity Eight boat is still having a couple problems putting the whole package together," head coach Jenny Hale said. "We need to work on some technical things, and I believe this boat has the dedication to make the changes."

Yet, K-State was able to dominate the rest of Saturday's competition.

The Cats' Second Varsity Eight boats notched two close victories, with the highlight coming against Stanford. Both crews experienced frequent lead changes as neither boat could muster a lead larger than three seat lengths, but K-State prevailed with a time of 6:59.7.

"This is the kind of race you hope to compete in at least once in your career as a rower," Hale said. "The entire length of the water was a battle as neither crew had the upper hand the whole race."

"Our boat finished with an outstanding sprint, and it made the difference. This is the strongest racing I have seen from this crew."

K-State's Novice Eight boat kept its unbeaten streak alive with two wins on Saturday, with the Sacramento State race featuring a 19-second Cat win over the Hornets.

However, despite the team's success in day one of the competition, the tables were turned for K-State on Sunday.

On day two, Cal-Davis swept the Cats, winning all three races of the round-robin racing duals and handing K-State's First Varsity Eight boat its third loss of its winless weekend.

"I think we rowed very hard in all three races this morning," Hale said Sunday. "We did not make many mistakes, we just did not match up with them technically."

Jack Gardner compiled a 147-81 record while coaching for the Wildcats during his two stints as head coach. In the 1950-51 season, he led the Wildcats to a 25-4 record and a second-place finish in the NCAA Tournament.

who stressed education, and he was a good friend as well as a coach," Barrett said.

Barrett played for him for four years including the 1950-51 season, when the team was defeated in the 1951 Final Four national title game by the University of Kentucky. After his collegiate career, Barrett went on to play with the Boston Celtics and said Gardner greatly helped him as a player.

"A great deal of my success as a basketball player came from Gardner," Barrett said.

Barrett said they used to travel to Final Fours together. Before his health depreciated, Gardner had attended every Final Four for 58 years.

"He was the only coach in America to go to all of the Final Fours," Barrett said. "He was honored three years ago for it."

K-State President Jon Wefald said he had the opportunity to meet Gardner several times, and Gardner was a gentleman every time. He said Gardner's effect will be felt wider than just in Manhattan.

"Coach Gardner will certainly go down as one of the greatest coaches at K-State and certainly all of college basketball," Wefald said.

Gardner garnered a variety of honors in his life. He was elected to the Basketball Hall of Fame and at least six others, Jim Gardner said.

In 28 years of coaching Gardner accumulated 649 victories and a .700 winning percentage. In addition to his work at K-State, in which he had a record of 147-81, Gardner won 486 games altogether, and those close to him said he was rarely outcoached by an opponent.

"I don't think he got outcoached very often," his son, Jim Gardner, said. "His teams didn't always win. Sometimes the other teams were just better, but he very rarely got outcoached."

Gardner retired from the head coaching ranks at the University of Utah in 1979. He went on to work as a consultant for the Utah Jazz and scouted such players as John Stockton.

"He went to another game to actually scout another player, and he saw Stockton," said David Allred, vice president of press relations for the Utah Jazz. "He came back and said 'hey you guys need to take a look at this guy,' and it turned out to be Stockton."

"There has been a lot of debate about who actually discovered him, but I think Jack can take a lot of the credit," Allred said. "He was one of the all-time good guys that people respected and a guy that always stayed close to the game."

Gardner is survived by his son, Jim; his daughter-in-law Diane; and three grandchildren: Natalie, James and David. Services are scheduled for noon on Friday at Rice-Eccles Stadium at the University of Utah.

with a throw of 154 feet, 9 inches, second in the shot put and third in the hammer. Tanel Sisney took first in the shot put with a toss of 56 feet, 8.5 inches and first in the hammer with a throw of 180 feet, 1 inch.

On the men's side, Tony Thompson's discus mark of 167 feet, 5 inches was good enough to claim first place. In the men's hammer, Todd Peterson finished second with a throw of 172 feet, 6 inches and Jason Reid finished second in the javelin with a season-best throw of 210 feet, seven inches.

The Cats will be in action next at the Mt. Sac Relays in Walnut, Calif., and the Missouri Relays in Columbia, Mo. The Mt. Sac meet will be especially competitive, Rovelto said.

"As far as the relay circuit goes, Texas, Mt. Sac, Drake and Penn are the four biggest in the country," Rovelto said. "Traditionally, Mt. Sac has been a very strong meet. If the weather is decent, there will be a lot of really good marks coming out of there."

Aside from defeating K-State's First and Second Varsity Eight boats, Cal-Davis managed to snap the undefeated 8-0 record held by the Cats' Novice Eight crew, as K-State fell in the race by nearly 11 seconds.

"They were 8-0, but this loss will make them faster," Hale said. "They were beat off the line and never recovered. This will be a positive experience for the boat, and I am proud of them."

Despite Sunday's misfortune, Hale said it was a successful weekend for the rowing program.

"Overall, I believe we had an outstanding weekend as far as learning to race in close races," Hale said. "We obviously would like to go home with more wins, but the wins we did come away with were hard fought and very well earned."

"This racing will pay off the remainder of the season and make us faster."

K-State will return to the water April 15, as they travel to Lawrence against Kansas.

"KU is running on all burners right now, and we must row outstanding next weekend to beat them," Hale said. "We plan to have a good week of training, improve from this weekend and have some good strokes."

World Bank critics boycott bonds

By LARRY MARGASAK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — World Bank critics launched a global campaign Monday to boycott the institution's bonds, hoping to deliver a potent economic punch to force changes in the bank's treatment of poor nations.

Boycott organizers announced their plans just as environmental demonstrators blocked a street and triggered a confrontation with police. Seven were arrested.

Protesters, believing the World Bank imposes crushing austerity demands on poor countries, are building up to a massive rally Sunday when world finance ministers are to gather in downtown Washington for the World Bank and International Monetary Fund spring meetings.

Protesters believe the bank imposes a crushing debt on poor nations, making it impossible to spend money on social programs. The agencies argue that belt-tightening programs are needed to help stabilize their economies.

President Clinton has favored a plan to reduce the debt of poor countries but not eliminate it as the demonstrators demand.

Official Washington, a city where protests are routine, quickly took notice of the plans.

Senate Minority Leader Thomas Daschle, D-S.D., gave reporters the Senate's schedule for the week, provided "we can get into work through the demonstrators." George Washington University, located near the World Bank and IMF headquarters, decided to close from Friday through Tuesday morning because of expected disruptions.

The anti-bank groups want to convince labor unions, churches, brokerage houses, commercial banks, universities, municipalities and average investors not to buy the bank's bonds, which now enjoy the highest rating.

"We want to chip away at their AAA rating," said Dr. Kevin Danaher, director of public education for Global Exchange, a San Francisco human rights group. He said that while some boycott organizers want to reform the bank, others want it abolished.

Added Pratap Chatterjee, an environmental commissioner of Berkeley, Calif.: "We want to break the bank."

The activists said they hoped bond rating firms such as Moody's Investors Service Inc. and Standard & Poor's Corp. would downgrade World Bank bonds, meaning it would cost more for the bank to borrow money.

Some of the organizers said they would target Citigroup's heavy purchase of the bonds.

World Bank President James Wolfensohn called the bond boycott "a misguided effort aimed at the wrong target."

"Investors ... are unlikely to be swayed by this campaign," Wolfensohn said Monday.

In a message to the World Bank staff, he said they should be proud of the work they do. "We are leading in many of the areas people are complaining about, such as the fight against poverty," he said.

Meanwhile, hoping to counter criticism of its operations, the International Monetary Fund decided Monday to establish an independent watchdog group.

In the past the IMF has relied on self-evaluation by its own departments supplemented by reports commissioned from outside consultants.

This week's protests follow action around the country to protest World Bank policies.

The Berkeley Council passed a resolution directing the city not to purchase World Bank bonds, and San Jose-based Local 9423 of the Communications Workers of America resolved not to invest in the bank. The local also called on the CWA to follow its lead.

The seven protesters arrested outside the bank headquarters Monday included several who chained themselves to a rental truck blocking Pennsylvania Avenue three blocks west of the White House. Others tried to hang a banner on the 12-story bank building, police said.

A small group of about 20 demonstrators chanted as police cleared the road, which remained blocked for about 45 minutes by the peaceful protest. The demonstrators taken into custody offered no resistance, said Police Chief Charles Ramsey.

Helms orders hold on aid to Haiti

By GEORGE GEDDA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Sen. Jesse Helms has quietly ordered a suspension of more than $30 million in U.S. assistance to Haiti because Haiti confiscated a rice company almost wholly owned by U.S. investors.

Haitian authorities said the confiscation of the Rice Corporation of Haiti was the result of customs fraud, though the company has denied any wrongdoing. The suspension of aid went into effect in March without announcement.

The chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has the power to independently suspend aid to a foreign nation, even if the money has already been appropriated by Congress.

According to the U.S. Agency for International Development, the suspension affects programs in agriculture and education and in the development of democracy, the rule of law and small businesses.

The largest of the affected programs were in agriculture ($11 million) and small business development ($6.5 million). Programs for feeding needy Haitians and for hurricane relief were not affected.

The administration said it opposes Helms' action. "We don't support congressional holds on funds we've requested," said State Department spokesman James P. Rubin.

"Often we need leverage and funds to solve problems, and we can't solve problems without any tools," he said.

Haitian customs officials accused the Rice Corporation of falsifying a customs declaration. In mid-March — after Helms suspended aid — the plant was allowed to reopen under customs supervision while the company pays a $1.4 million fine, according to Justice Minister Camille Leblanc. A ship that had been confiscated was also released.

But Larry Theriot, a co-owner of the company, has denied wrongdoing and said the plant remains closed by order of Haitian customs officials. He said the fine being sought would bankrupt the company.

On March 7, Helms asked U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright to deny U.S. visas to 10 Haitian nationals "who had abused their authority" in the dispute, including Leblanc, Police Chief Pierre Denize and Finance Minister Fred Joseph.

"Under the guise of a customs dispute, Haitian officials have run the proprietors of the U.S.-owned Rice Corporation of Haiti off their property at gunpoint" and "appear determined to extort money from several U.S. businessmen and confiscate their property," Helms said in a March 7 letter to Albright.

Ira Kurzban, a Miami-based attorney for Haiti's government, said that even after the fine is paid, the plant may remain closed pending resolution of an unrelated ownership dispute between the Rice Corporation and American Rice Corporation of Houston, Texas. That case is being argued in Haitian and U.S. courts.

The dispute comes as the United States is increasingly unhappy with Haiti's repeated delays in organizing long-overdue parliamentary elections amid a spate of street violence and politically motivated killings.

Albright said last week the administration is trying to enlist the cooperation of former President Jean Bertrand Aristide in easing the situation.

The administration is aware that Aristide wants to get back into office, Albright told the Boston Globe. Given his support among Haitians, Aristide "ought to allow there to be parliamentary elections, and then presidential elections ... We are trying to persuade him he is going about it in the wrong way."

Health QUESTION

By: Carol Kennedy
Director of health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center

Q: How do you know if someone has drank to the point of alcohol poisoning?

A: Alcohol poisoning refers to alcohol consumption to the point of severe intoxication. With as few as one to two drinks, reason, caution, intelligence and self-control can begin to be affected.

With continued alcohol consumption, the senses, coordination, balance, heart rate and finally breathing can diminish. If you are with an intoxicated person who is not responsive, here are potentially lifesaving steps to take:

- 1) Place the individual on their stomach, with their face to one side.
- 2) Monitor the person until they are awake and alert.
- 3) Check for regular breathing (at least eight times per minute) and change in normal skin color.
- 4) Check for a response to physical stimuli (the person should respond if a fingernail is squeezed).
- 5) If in doubt, seek medical attention.

STD

AWARENESS MONTH

Month focuses on spotlighting issue through events, education opportunities offered through Lafene Health Center, SHAPE

BY SHANNON DELMEZ

April is Sexually Transmitted Diseases Awareness Month, but that doesn't matter.

Carol Kennedy, director of health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center, and her intern, Marisa Maune, said every month is STD awareness month.

"We typically address this topic as often as we can," Kennedy said. "It's not something that we are emphasizing any more than we do any other month."

As part of the observance of STD awareness month, STD, HIV/AIDS Peer Educators will show a sneak preview of SHAPE TV at 6:30 p.m. April 18 in the Union Little Theatre, Kennedy said.

"The goal of the program is to make students aware of STDs and also give information to the students for making smart decisions in what they do now that they are adults," she said.

There are two different varieties of sexually transmitted diseases — curable and incurable, Kennedy said.

Curable STDs include chlamydia, gonorrhea, syphilis and trichomoniasis, Maune said. The incurable ones are HIV, herpes, genital warts and hepatitis B.

The three most common diseases are herpes, genital warts and chlamydia.

"Even though chlamydia, gonorrhea and syphilis are curable, if somebody has them and they don't get tested for a couple of years, that can cause some problems such as sterility or infertility," Maune said. "You have to get tested and be treated before you're fine."

There are also treatments available for the incurable diseases, Kennedy said.

"Most people will recover from hepatitis B, but they can get very sick," she said. "If genital warts are bothersome, they can be removed or there are creams or lotions that can be used. One thing to keep in mind for females, if they are on the cervix, they are linked to cervical cancer. It is important that women get their annual Pap smears to be sure that they aren't having any problems in that area."

"Herpes can be very painful and very bothersome. There are treatments available to help with the pain of the blisters."

Kennedy also said the news media has talked lately about new drugs in treating HIV that will enable victims to live longer, but patients have to take somewhere between 25-45 pills a day.

"There are lots of side effects from them," she said. "Even though we say it's treatable, it's not curable, and anyone that has an HIV diagnosis will have 10 more years or maybe a little bit longer. It's important that students don't relax in their thinking and believe that this is treatable and they can live a normal life, because it is a devastating disease."

The only STD to have a vaccine now is hepatitis B. Maune said the vaccine is available at Lafene in allergy and immunization clinic. It takes six months to be completed.

Kennedy and Maune both said it is important to use protective measures to prevent contracting STDs or spreading them to others.

According to the American College Health Association, there are several methods to reduce the risk of contracting an STD. These include forming a monogamous relationship, use of condoms, be tested for STDs as part of a regular medical checkup, learn more about common symptoms and refrain from using drugs and alcohol in intimate situations.

"Abstinence is still practiced by many students," Kennedy said. "It is an acceptable form of behavior. There are ways to be intimate without having sexual intercourse."

Kennedy said information is available through the Lafene health education department on ways to be intimate and abstain at the same time.

Maune said awareness of STDs is important, especially because Riley and Geary counties combined have a high rate of STDs. She said she thinks students realize STDs are out there, but they don't believe they can get them. Kennedy said students do think they are immune.

"I think that is one of the common feedback comments that we get is they didn't know how easy it was to get a disease, and they didn't know how many there were out there," Kennedy said.

Rec crowds drive students to local facilities

By REED DUNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Crowding at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex has taken some students to local fitness centers.

Alyce Whalen, manager of Cottonwood Racquet Club, said there are about 30 students enrolled at the club. She said most of the students use the facilities due to time and scheduling.

"Most of them are here because of the time they have for their workout," Whalen said. "It's just a matter of time. If they have 45 minutes in a day, they know they can come in here and get in and get out."

Whalen said even though a membership costs $75 a semester, students who use the facility find it worth the money.

"The kids that are out here are out here regularly," she said. "It's really part of their regular routine."

One of the main attractions

Cottonwood Racquet Club offers that is not available for students at the Rec Complex is a coed whirlpool. Whalen said. She said the center also offers indoor tennis.

"We have indoor tennis year round," she said. "We have a tennis pro here, and we do racquet stringing too."

Jamie Philippi, manager of Unique Professional Fitness and Aerobics, said most of its clients are from the community, but a couple dozen of its memberships are from students. He said students who have memberships take advantage of working out in the afternoons when it might be busy at the Rec Complex.

"Probably the main reason is to not have to fight the crowds at the Rec," Philippi said. "We're always here to help them out, and it's less crowded during the day."

The $19.95-per-month student special at Unique Professional Fitness and Aerobics will get students full access to the facility's machines, free weights, racquet ball courts, whirlpool and sauna.

Because there is not a problem with crowding at the Aggieville center, Philippi said the facility is able to provide individual help for its members.

"One of the big things is we're able to give them advice, and we're probably more personable," Philippi said.

For students who might be interested in an alternative to the Rec Center, Philippi said they have a free trial-basis pass.

"We do offer a free week pass for people to try it out," he said. "They can come down and work out for a week with no obligations."

Aaron Rodehorst, sophomore in finance, said he first went to Unique Professional Fitness and Aerobics when his roommate needed a weight-lifting partner.

"I started out going to the Rec my freshman year, and I went a lot," he said. "My roommate doesn't go to K-State, and he needed a lifting partner, so I decided to start going."

Even though there is a charge for the services, Rodehorst said it is reasonable, and there is not the overcrowding problem he found at the Rec Complex.

"Compared to the Rec, it's a lot easier to lift at Pro Fitness, because there is not a crowd when we want to go there," he said. "Their equipment is comparable. They're sized down, but there is not overcrowding."

"We're always here to help them out, and it's less crowded during the day."

British government might do away with closing time at pubs

■ Pubs that now close at 11 p.m. could remain open 24 hours, 7 days.

BY SUE LEEMAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Hoping to cut down on binge drinking and pub brawls, the British government proposed a novel idea Monday: Allow bars to stay open 24 hours a day.

Scrapping the mandatory 11 p.m. closing time was the centerpiece of plans to liberalize and streamline licensing laws that were inspired by fears of munitions workers getting drunk during World War I.

"Fixed closing times encourage binge drinking around last orders," Home Secretary Jack Straw told the House of Commons. "The result is lots of people hitting the streets — and sometimes each other — at the same time."

Under the government proposals, released as a discussion paper, any pub, licensed cafe or restaurant can apply to stay open for 24 hours, seven days a week.

While some U.S. cities and towns are moving toward earlier bar closings to combat heavy drinking, in Britain, the bureaucrats, police and bartenders all believe that longer hours — allowing for staggered closing times — will reduce binge drinking and alcohol-related crime.

Children will also be allowed into pubs for the first time — but only to watch. Eighteen is the minimum legal age for buying alcoholic drinks in a pub.

Pub owners and many drinkers said "cheers."

"This is a step in the right direction toward the repeal of archaic laws set during wartime," said Mary Curnock, director of the British Institute of Innkeeping which represents 16,500 licensees.

In practice, police and pub keepers expect the 24-hour licenses to be confined to the centers of London and other big cities, with the main aim being to stagger closing times between 11 p.m. and 3 a.m.

In Cambridge, Ceri Garrett, landlady of the Baron of Beef pub, has long pressed for change. Rowdy deadline drinkers recently smashed an ornamental stained glass window at the inn beside the River Cam.

"Some people down several pints just before closing time," she said.

As an experiment, bars across Britain were allowed to serve alcohol around the clock on New Year's Eve and the night passed peacefully, encouraging Straw's officials to go for a radical overhaul.

The changes would affect 140,000 pubs, restaurants, hotels and nightclubs in England and Wales. Scotland, which has different drinking laws, already allows pubs in some areas to remain open until 3 a.m.

British studies suggest that alcohol abuse contributes to 40 percent of violent crime, 78 percent of assaults and 88 percent of criminal damage cases. A 1993 government survey found that 16 percent of all violent incidents happened in or near pubs or clubs; a study the previous year found 47 percent of violent incidents near pubs happen between 11 p.m. and midnight.

The new policy, which could be law by summer 2001, would bring Britain into line with other European countries.

Many Parisian bars serve alcohol until the early hours, and some clubs dispense drinks steadily until they close at dawn.

In many German cities, bars serve alcohol all night, and so do some bars in the Spanish capital, Madrid. In Denmark, some pubs and cafes lay on the liquor until 5 a.m. on weekends.

In Britain, a law passed in 1921 — in response to fears aroused during World War I — cut pub opening times from 19 to 10 hours on weekdays, and five hours on Sundays.

In 1988, the government abolished a compulsory weekday afternoon closure in pubs in England and Wales. But the 11 p.m. closing remained, except for nightclubs, which can serve alcohol up to 3 a.m.

Nasdaq suffers 2nd-worst drop in history

■ Technology-focused composite index drops; blue-chip stocks rise.

BY EILEEN GLANTON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Technology shares slumped Monday, pulling the Nasdaq composite index down more than 250 points and proving that the nervousness and volatility that shook Wall Street last week has not left the market. Blue-chip stocks rose, however, as investors sought their more stable and predictable returns.

The Nasdaq composite fell 258.25 to 4,188.20, its second largest point drop ever. The increasingly volatile index has recorded nine of its 10 worst point drops since the start of the year, as well as nine of its 10 biggest point gains.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 75.08 to 11,186.56. Financial shares led the advance after a Merrill Lynch strategist recommended clients move some money from technology stocks into financials. American Express gained 4 1/8 to 143 3/16 and J.P. Morgan rose 4 11/16 to 134 9/16.

Broader stock indicators closed mostly lower. The Standard & Poor's 500 fell 11.89 to 1,504.46.

Technology stocks fell in a steady spiral as investors wondered whether upcoming first-quarter earnings reports will justify the high prices of tech issues. The selloff was a clear indication that the weakness that gripped the sector last week has not run its course, said Tony Dwyer, chief market strategist at Kirlin Holdings.

"The rebound we saw last Friday was just too quick," he said. "The market is not back to normal, because valuations for a lot of these technology stocks remain too extreme."

Declines hit an array of technology issues. Microsoft fell 3 to 86 1/16, and Applied Materials fell 1 1/2 to 103 3/8 on the Nasdaq.

Yahoo! fell 9 3/16 to 141 15/16 and BroadVision declined 11 3/16 to 44 7/8.

Last week, Dwyer said, many investors hopped back into the market on the promise of strong first-quarter earnings. The reporting season picks up this week, with several prominent technology companies — Motorola, Advanced Micro Devices and Rambus — among the first to release their figures.

Most of those stocks turned lower Monday after early gains.

"The fundamentals are terrific," Dwyer said. "You can't debate that. But a lot of that strength is priced into the stock price already."

In recent weeks, many Wall Street strategists have reminded clients that the strongest earnings growth this quarter is expected not from the technology sector, but from the less heralded energy sector. Oil companies are expected to reap the benefits of a spike in crude oil prices.

On Monday, widespread circulation of a research note from Richard McCabe, chief market analyst at Merrill Lynch, helped draw some investors away from technology and into Old Economy stocks. McCabe told clients they should reduce their exposure to technology stocks in favor of energy, financial and consumer issues.

"As a sector, I'm certainly not suggesting that tech is all washed up," McCabe said in an interview. "But now is a very good time to do some housekeeping and get rid of the stocks that don't have solid fundamentals. The super-exuberance of last year is gone."

DuPont rose 2 1/2 to 57 1/2 and 3M rose 1 1/8 to 92 3/4, helping pull the Dow higher.

Philip Morris fell 1/2 to 22 after a Florida jury said Friday that the company, along with other large cigarette makers, must pay $6.9 million in compensatory damages to sick smokers.

Philip Morris has vowed to fight any punitive damages in the next phase of the trial.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by a 7-to-6 margin on the New York Stock Exchange and by a 5-to-2 margin on the Nasdaq.

NYSE volume totaled 850.18 million shares, compared with 888.41 million in the previous session. The Russell 2000 index of smaller companies fell 24.33 to 518.66.

Overseas, Japan's Nikkei stock average rose 1.8 percent. Germany's DAX index fell 0.1 percent, Britain's FT-SE 100 fell 0.6 percent, and France's CAC-40 was up 0.9 percent.

"The rebound we saw last Friday was just too quick. The market is not back to normal, because valuations for a lot of these technology stocks remain too extreme."

Former Wall Street executive goes on trial for insider-trading plot with porn-star girlfriend

BY LARRY NEUMEISTER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A former top Wall Street executive went on trial Monday for allegedly sharing inside stock information with his porn-star mistress.

The jury, though, won't be told that Kathryn Gannon is an X-rated movie actress.

U.S. District Judge Kimba Wood ruled that Gannon's career is near irrelevant and that prosecutors can show there was an affair between her and James McDermott Jr. without revealing her occupation.

In opening statement, prosecutor Alex Young K. Oh told the jury only that Gannon is a "28-year-old blonde, an attractive woman who was also a dancer and model" and sometimes performed under the stage name "Marilyn Star."

Gannon, a Canadian citizen, was not in court Monday. Prosecutors are seeking her extradition from Canada.

McDermott's wife sat behind him in court as Oh accused the 54 million-a-year executive of living a double life between 1997 and 1999 by engaging in the affair while seeming "to be the master of his universe."

Oh said McDermott supplemented Gannon's annual income of between $50,000 and $100,000 with $80,000 in checks along with secret information about impending mergers that allowed her to make large profits.

Gannon then allegedly gave inside information to another man with whom she was having an affair, Anthony P. Pomponio. Gannon and Pomponio made $170,000 on the illegal trades over eight months, the prosecutor said.

McDermott's lawyer Scott Muller told the jury that the charges against his client are false, but he acknowledged the affair.

Muller said McDermott made the recommendations to Gannon before the stocks were put on a list at McDermott's company that must be kept secret.

The lawyer said it would be absurd to think McDermott would risk his $4 million-a-year job, his 26-year marriage and his relationship with his two teen-age daughters to feed her inside stock tips that earned her only $15,000.

McDermott, 48, of Briarcliff Manor, Pomponio, 45, of North Caldwell, N.J., and Gannon, 30, who has a home in Miami, Fla., are all charged with conspiracy and securities fraud.

8 California prison guards on trial for provoking inmate brutality

By KILEY RUSSELL
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FRESNO, Calif. — Eight guards accused of staging gladiator-style inmate fights for their own amusement go on trial today in the biggest brutality case yet to come out of one of California's toughest prisons.

Four of the Corcoran State Prison guards face possible life sentences for the shooting of an inmate during one of the 1994 brawls, moments after a guard allegedly said: "It's going to be duck hunting season."

The federal trial has been a long time coming. The guards were indicted in 1998 after years of internal investigations, legislative hearings and a state grand jury probe produced no charges. The FBI accused the state of trying to block its investigation — a charge corrections officials denied.

"The real subject of this trial will not be the individual officers, but will be the Department of Corrections," said Catherine Campbell, president of the watchdog group California Prison Focus.

Guards at Corcoran, about 40 miles south of Fresno, wounded 43 prisoners and killed seven others between 1989 and mid-1994. Only eight other inmates were killed by guards in the nation's eight largest prison systems during that period, California Prison Focus said.

The defendants allegedly conspired to brutalize the prisoners by setting up two fights between rival gang members.

Defense attorneys say the guards were just following the state's since-rescinded "integrated yard" policy, which forced inmates of different ethnic and geographic backgrounds to exercise together.

"They have to prove that our clients intended to violate inmates' constitutional rights. We don't believe that's the case," defense attorney Curtis Sisk said.

FBI agent James Maddock has said that "it appears the fights were staged, even provoked, for the amusement of correctional officers or retribution against inmates."

Jury selection begins today.

To get convictions, prosecutors must persuade the jurors to trust the word of violent criminals over law officers who routinely risk their lives to maintain order.

Also, jurors in California's Central Valley tend to be sympathetic to guards, because prisons provide much of the region's non-farm employment — as many as 10,000 jobs. In November, four Corcoran guards were acquitted of setting up the rape of an inmate by a prisoner known as the "Booby Bandit."

Sgt. Truman Jennings and officers Michael Gipson, Timothy Dickerson, and Raul Tavaréz face up to 10 years in connection with a fight.

Lt. Douglas Martin, Sgt. John Vaughn, officer Jerry Arvizu and officer Christopher Bethea face life sentences plus 10 years in the death of Preston Tate, who was shot in the head by Bethea during another brawl.

Tate's death, which led to an $825,000 settlement for his family, has already led to key policy changes in California's prisons.

Prisoners who feel endangered can now choose not to exercise with rival inmates, and guards try to keep gangs separate. Misconduct accusations now get investigated by the state inspector general. And prison officials are seeking the advice of inmates on reducing violence.

Financial aid increases to counteract cuts

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A larger financial-aid pool will be available in fiscal year 2001 for K-State students hit hard by tuition increases.

The Kansas Legislature completed an $8 million budget Friday that might mean the university will receive $20,000 less than expected, but additional financial-aid funds will balance out the cut, said Kim Wilcox, executive director of the Board of Regents.

"The university budgets were reduced, and that results in the decrease," he said. "At the same time, there was an initiative to increase financial-aid funding and student salaries."

The budget cut was made to regents schools due to two tuition increases, Wilcox said.

Jack Taylor, assistant director of student financial assistance, said the additional financial-aid money will more than likely be put into two programs: the State of Kansas Scholarship and the Kansas Comprehensive Grant.

"Both of those programs are great programs," he said. "The State of Kansas Scholarship goes to the top-1 percent of the graduating seniors in Kansas and is based on academics and financial need."

The Kansas Comprehensive Grant is also based on financial need, Taylor said.

Taylor said staff at K-State Student Financial Assistance worked closely with the Kansas Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators to improve the university's financial aid pool.

"We have been telling the Board of Regents that we needed more funding for quite some time in the comprehensive grant program," he said. "I know that Vice President (of Institutional Advancement Bob) Krause has in previous years asked for additional funding."

Another feature of the bill is an $8 million increase in faculty salaries for regents schools, which averages out to a 5.9-percent raise for faculty.

While this raise in faculty salaries is a step in the right direction, it isn't all that K-State faculty members had hoped for, said Marion Gray, president of Faculty Senate.

"This is a good start, but only a start in getting faculty salaries up to what they should be," he said. "It's maybe 25 percent of what's needed. This is going to have to be a multi-year effort."

Concern over the low 2.5-percent raise for non-faculty and classified employees is a main focus for the members of the Faculty Senate.

"Unclassified professionals that are really vital to our academic activities on our campus are only getting a 2.5-percent raise, and we wanted to bring that to the attention of the legislators and the regents," Gray said.

Operating expenses are also an issue, Gray said, with K-State working at 60 percent of what peer institutions receive and no additional funding allowed through this bill.

Gray said he and Faculty Senate will continue to work with administration, the Legislature and the regents to keep them informed on the salary situation.

The budget bill is still facing approval by the Legislature when members return to session after a two-week break on April 26, and will then be passed on to Kansas Gov. Bill Graves, Wilcox said.

Nicole Meyer (left), Chad Boisseau (middle) and Angie Herbers (right), seniors in financial planning, won first prize in a financial-planning contest in New York this past weekend. The win earned the school's financial-planners organization $10,000 and each student $350.

3 students win more than $10,000 in American Express-sponsored contest

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three K-State students put their academic program on the map this weekend by bringing home the top prize from a national financial-planning competition.

Chad Boisseau, Angie Herbers and Nicole Meyer, seniors in financial planning, attended the American Express Financial Planning Invitational in New York this weekend and netted first place in the contest.

"We won $10,000 for the Future Financial Planners organization, and then we each got a $350 cash prize for winning the presentation part of the contest," Herbers said.

The grand prize will be put into a scholarship fund for students involved in the financial planning curriculum.

The win was a bit of a surprise, considering that the three students had never compiled a financial plan before the competition, said John Grable, adviser for the family financial-planning program.

"If you had asked me last week, I would have said we would represent the university well, but I wouldn't have picked us to win," Grable said. "For these three students to go and win is the greatest thing for Kansas State."

K-State first became involved in the competition when American Express contacted 100 schools around the country that offer financial-planning programs. Advisers from each school were then required to draft a letter that would convince the company why their students should take part in the contest.

Of these 100 schools, 17 were invited to submit a financial plan to the company. K-State was included in this invitation.

Grable said competition was stiff around the Manhattan campus as three financial-planning teams competed to send their particular project to New York. Each team worked independently for almost three weeks in order to complete a full, comprehensive financial plan that would then be judged by community financial members.

The team of Boisseau, Herbers and Meyer was chosen to represent the university, and its project was sent to New York.

Seventeen schools mailed financial plans to American Express, but only six were invited to the national competition. K-State joined Texas Tech, San Diego State, the University of Minnesota, North Texas and Western Carolina last week at the national competition.

All students involved in the contest met in a single room Thursday evening to receive the final conditions of the competition, Grable said. The teams were to create a financial plan for the fictional Hernandez family.

"The case they had been working on was changed, and they basically could work on it up until 10 the following morning," he said. "They went up to American Express headquarters and presented the case in front of industry people, magazine editors, judges — big hitters from the community."

Student power plant workers to be replaced with full-time employees

By JAMIE BARRETT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students employed at the K-State power plant are going to be replaced by full-time employees, said Randy Slover, director of facilities and maintenance.

The power plant, which provides some electricity on campus and generates heat for steam and chilled water for cooling, has employed part-time student employees since the early 1980s.

Slover said although students will no longer be employed at the power plant, they will have the opportunity to be relocated to other jobs on campus.

"We have students who do shift work after the regular employees," Slover said.

"What we are now planning on is filling those positions with full-time employees."

Slover said there are five students, who work a total of 27 hours a week each, employed at the plant.

Don Dulac, senior in business management, said he has worked at the power plant for almost a year and is confused about why the student jobs are suddenly being replaced.

"I have about a year's worth of training with this job, and I really did enjoy doing it," Dulac said. "I don't see why they need to get rid of the students that work out there."

Dulac said he worked in the evenings from 4 p.m. to 12 a.m. and during the day on weekends.

"We kept an eye on the place for them,"

Dulac said. "We all work hard, and I can't say that there is anyone there I do not like, because everyone is real friendly."

Slover said the student employees monitored the running of the equipment at the power plant, and it seemed reasonable for those jobs to given to full-time employees.

"We had students who mainly worked after the regular employees left," Slover said. "It was just decided that it would be easier for those shift-work positions to be filled by full-time employees."

Dulac said a memo was sent to the students telling them their jobs were going to be terminated.

"They did offer to relocate us in other places on campus," Dulac said, "but in doing that we would just put in applications in Dykstra and be at the same place as all the other applicants."

Dulac said he enjoyed his job at the power plant because there are few jobs that actually give college students responsibility.

"I was always proud to say that I worked there, because I was actually doing an important job," Dulac said.

Now, Dulac said, he and the other student employees are simply waiting until they do not have a job anymore.

"They did not tell us when they are for sure going to lay us off, but we are assuming we can stretch it out to the summer," Dulac said. "But right now we just feel like lame ducks waiting it out."

Students earn top honors

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stephanie Russell, sophomore in biology and biochemistry, was surprised to learn that her interest in biology and research would earn her a prestigious honor.

Russell and three other students were recently awarded the Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship, a federally funded award created by Congress to encourage people to pursue careers in math, science and engineering. Brandon Grossardt, junior in math; Brian Keller, junior in microbiology; and Jacob Taussig, junior in biochemistry and chemical science were the three other recipients.

Beth Powers, scholarship adviser, said the award will not only help students financially during the last part of their college career, but will also give them other opportunities for graduate school, research and career plans for the future. Students will receive up to $7,500 annually, and sophomores will receive two years of funding.

Police arrest 7 for drugs

By DANEDRI THOMPSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Seven people were arrested by the Riley County Police Department, including one minor, on a variety of drug charges Monday afternoon after searching a house at 404 S. 18th St. in Manhattan.

The adults arrested were Eric P. Anderson, Eric N. Evans, Adam C. Johnson, Daryl S. Johnson, Thomas R. Neff and Julie D. Portuese.

Lt. Rodney Jager, of the RCPD criminal investigations, said the subjects were arrested and taken to the county jail, where they posted bail.

The police search uncovered methamphetamine, marijuana, cocaine, drug paraphernalia and a few shotguns at the house.

Jager said the arrests were the result of an ongoing investigation of alleged drug activity at the house.

He said RCPD covert operations investigators gathered information about drugs allegedly being sold and distributed out of that location.

"All documents were forwarded to the county attorney, and we got a search warrant," he said.

Jager wouldn't say exactly how the house and its occupants came under suspicion but said the covert operations unit is continuously investigating possible illegal drug activities.

"We are constantly in the status of performing these duties and elicit the services of citizens when they might have that information," he said.

He said RCPD and Riley County Crime Stoppers get information about suspicious activity from a number of sources, including concerned citizens.

"Many times citizens will indicate that to us," he said. "We'll receive anonymous calls. We'll take that information then and follow up on it."

"We'll go ahead and continue to gather evidence and when sufficient to establish probable cause, we apply for search warrants. Hopefully, it will result in an arrest and seizure of any illegal drugs."

Russians to fortify borders due to unrest in Chechnya

NAZRAN, Russia — Fearing a Chechen rebel resurgence as spring approaches, Russian forces are trying to fortify the breakaway republic's borders, the military announced Tuesday.

Fighting has concentrated in the southern mountains because thousands of rebels fled the Chechen capital of Grozny in early February. The rebels know the rugged terrain well, and their hand could be strengthened as melting snow and budding greenery eases moving and hiding.

The Kremlin's spokesman for Chechnya, Sergei Yastrzhembsky, said Tuesday that Russia won't back off its drive to liquidate the rebels. He said the Kremlin is trying to maintain contacts with Chechen President Aslan Maskhadov through intermediaries, but that complete disarmament of the rebels is necessary before undertaking "some political process."

Russia has offered amnesty to rebels who lay down their arms and Yastrzhembsky has said Maskhadov could be eligible, even though he has been charged with participation in armed rebellion.

The Kremlin regards Maskhadov as a relative moderate, and he reinforced that impression in an interview released by Germany's Deutsche Welle radio Monday, in which he said he was prepared without conditions to end the war.

However, Maskhadov has not been able to rein in Chechen warlords.

After months of Russian assaults and intense rebel resistance, a relative lull has set in during recent days. Federal forces, meanwhile, are fortifying the border with Georgia to the south and along the eastern border with Dagestan, the military command said.

Russia sent ground troops into Chechnya in September. The campaign came after rebels invaded neighboring Dagestan, and the rebels are also blamed in apartment building blasts in Russia that killed about 300 people.

The war has come under wide international criticism for Russia's indiscriminate use of force and for alleged human-rights abuses by Russian soldiers including executions, rape and torture.

Chechnya has been a de facto independent since the end of the 1994-96 war.

Women business owners to rally for equal opportunities

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Women business owners are heating up the U.S. economy, yet they remain frozen out of advantages enjoyed by their male counterparts.

That's the message from a bipartisan group of lawmakers who want to reverse the trend, starting with a June 4-5 summit in Kansas City, Mo. The goal of the meeting is developing an agenda for Congress and the new president in 2001.

"We didn't want to sit and listen to officials — we want officials to listen to us," said Janet Poppen, a St. Louis accountant who serves on the National Association of Women Business Owners advisory board.

"We know how to put together a bid, we know the rules. We want to know what's happening at the other end as to why we're not getting the contracts, why women aren't a designated group under SBA guidelines," she said.

Organizers call the meeting the first of its kind. "I've never heard of anything this size, with this kind of bipartisan support, focusing on women's business issues," New Jersey Gov. Christine Todd Whitman, who plans to attend, said Tuesday.

The growth of women-owned businesses belies the obstacles. Women-owned firms number more than 9 million nationwide and are one of the swiftest-growing segments of the economy, annually generating more than $3.6 trillion in sales, according to Census Bureau and NAWBO estimates. Still, they face challenges that range from no access to capital to inability to buy health insurance to balancing responsibilities caring for children or aging parents.

These firms employ about 27.5 million people in the United States. That's more than all the Fortune 500 companies combined, said Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, who once owned a Dallas candy-making business.

"We must create a climate in which they can flourish," she said.

Poppen, who went into business for herself 15 years ago, said a common problem for women is lack of access to capital. Many women start service businesses, which are not asset-heavy and are difficult to sell to lenders, she said.

Apartment fair. Students still searching for a place to live next year will have an opportunity to find an apartment Wednesday.

The Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs, part of the Office of Student Activities and Services, is having an apartment fair in the Union Courtyard free of charge for students.

"The apartment fair is an opportunity for students and faculty to come and talk with area landlords and apartment managers when they are all in one location," said Andrew McDonald, director of the Consumer and Tenant Affairs.

There will be 10 area apartment complex representatives at the fair.

Some representatives will be from large complexes, while others will represent many small complexes.

"This makes apartment searching more convenient and less time consuming," McDonald said.

University Commons is one of the apartment complexes that will be represented at the fair. Commons will feature a special on its four-bedroom apartments.

Students can obtain a list of housing and apartments available, price information and phone numbers of contacts. They can also set up appointments through the representatives at the fair.

This service can be useful to the students and faculty if it is utilized, McDonald said.

KU speaker. U.S. Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas says he lives a solitary life that mostly involves reading, writing and thinking.

"No one pals around with me," said Thomas, who is visiting classes at the University of Kansas School of Law.

"I don't know what that says. It's a sedentary life; it's an isolated life. It's a good life."

Thomas, whose confirmation to the court in 1991 was hotly debated after Anita Hill made sexual harassment allegations against him, visited classes Monday on the campus.

Cancer victim remembered

By BEN HOPPER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It takes a special person to touch many lives.

April Larson, though, positively affected those in her school and community while battling cancer.

Larson grew up on a farm outside of Leonardville, Kan., about 20 miles northwest of Manhattan. She played softball and basketball, had dreams of playing high school sports and graduating from K-State.

Those dreams faced an obstacle in summer 1994, when Larson was having vision problems.

After an eye exam, Larson was sent to have a CAT scan and MRI. Doctors discovered a brain tumor, called medulloblastoma, Debbie Larson, Larson's mother, said.

Larson spent two weeks at Stormont Vail Hospital in Topeka after undergoing treatment. She then was transferred to KU Medical Center for six weeks for pediatric radiation therapy, Debbie Larson said.

"She was always a shy person," she said. "But being diagnosed made her stronger."

Larson returned to start high school at Riley County High School once her therapy was concluded. Peers welcomed her home with care and love, but Debbie Larson said her daughter didn't want to be to be the center of attention.

"She wanted to be treated as normally as possible," she said.

Doctors discovered another tumor in 1996, this time on her spinal column, and they removed it surgically. Chemotherapy started once again following the surgery.

K-State head football coach Bill Snyder met Larson after she was diagnosed.

Snyder, who became a close friend of the Larsons, said he enjoyed the opportunity to speak with Larson, and that she had a wonderful sense of humor.

"She carried herself with tremendous courage, compassion for others and had a strong sense of family," he said.

"She did it all without a sense of bitterness."

Snyder also said he admired her determination.

"The cancer didn't slow her down," Snyder said. "She still pursued her education."

At Riley County High School's graduation, with Snyder in attendance, Larson's classmates honored her with the Silver Lining Award.

"Our class made up the award," Krista Thomas, a friend and classmate, said. "April was our silver lining behind all of our dark clouds."

The class presented the award to show Larson what she meant to them, Thomas said. Larson received a standing ovation.

Larson started as a student at K-State in fall 1998, but chemotherapy treatments interrupted her classes when the cancer recurred where it had originally started.

There were more spots on her spine, Debbie Larson said.

Gretchen Holden, director of Disabled Student Services, said Larson kept her goal of attaining an education. Holden said she never whined or complained.

"Even in the hospital, she always tried to do homework," she said. "Larson was always positive, upbeat and conscientious."

Larson became very sick her first semester but was determined to stay a K-State student. She wanted to attend KU Medical School after K-State, but with the chemotherapy, it was too much.

Throughout the next year, Larson's condition got worse, her mother said, and she died on Dec. 30, 1999.

Larson's RCHS class decided to honor the memory of their classmate by starting the Silver Lining Memorial Scholarship. The scholarship will be awarded to an RCHS student who has overcome obstacles, Thomas said.

Krista Thomas, freshman pre-professional elementary education, lost her friend and Riley County High School classmate April Larson to cancer this past December. Thomas and her classmates decided to honor Larson's memory by starting the Silver Lining Memorial Scholarship for an RCHS student who has overcome obstacles.

"It won't be based on grades or popularity but on qualities that Larson possessed," she said.

The RCHS class of 1998 is sponsoring a fund-raiser for the scholarship on April 29. A silent auction with items donated by the Kansas City Chiefs, K-State football team and local businesses will raise funds.

There will be a 3-on-3-basketball tournament in the morning and a raffle and taco supper from 4:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.

The Butler County Community College Headliners, the college's singing group, will perform at 4 p.m.

Thomas said this scholarship is to preserve the memory of their classmate.

"She was my inspiration — she gave me a reality check," she said. "She made everyone smile."

K-State campus reaches 78-percent completion in Kansas census

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is about 78 percent compliant in filling out the Kansas census adjustment forms over KATS.

Assistant Dean of Student Life Scott Jones said more than 14,000 students have completed the questionnaire out of the about 18,000 who are required to fill it out.

"We're moving right along," he said. "I get an update every day on how we're doing with the census."

The information from K-State needs to be turned in to the Secretary of State's office by June 1 so May 31, is the last day K-State can collect information from students, Jones said.

Census adjustment project manager Mike Brassel said 18 colleges of 54 have turned in information to the Secretary of State's office.

He said most of the schools still have a few students who need to fill out the questionnaire.

"One or two have checked every name off the list," he said.

"As an overall indication, the returns have been real positive. The schools have worked real hard on this."

Brassel said many colleges were shocked when they found out what they had to do, but they have put their best efforts forward to do what needed to be done.

When the colleges had to do this in the 1990 census, enrollment still required students to stand in line.

Brassel said that when the colleges told him that students don't have to stand in line for enrollment anymore, the Secretary of State's office offered the online option.

K-State and the University of Kansas were the only two schools to take that option, but KU is still offering the questionnaire in paper form along with the online alternative.

"K-State has led the way on that," he said. "It was the first one to take that option and adopt as a system."

The questionnaire students fill out through KATS is separate from the U.S. Federal Census form they will receive in the mail.

Jones said he wanted to remind students that it's not too late for students to turn in their federal census data regardless of where they live.

"If they lost their form, they can get a duplicate form in the Office of Student Life in 102 Holton Hall," he said.

"We also have forms available in different languages and someone who is here on on Tuesday and Thursday from 1:30 to 4 p.m. to assist with the federal census."

Jones said both the Kansas census form and the federal census form are important.

"The federal census is going to be used to determine how much money Manhattan gets over the next 10 years," he said.

"It's a huge deal. Students are probably going to be the critical population for determining whether or not Manhattan receives an accurate count, and that accurate count is going to be important in determining whether Manhattan exceeds the 50,000 mark."

Sherman Parks Jr., district manager of the local census office, said the next phase of the census is the non-response follow up.

On April 27 the census office will send census takers to go door to door.

Parks said Manhattan is doing well right now in mailing in census forms.

"You can always do better," he said. "The thing with Manhattan is that it's so important that they keep going."

Proposed bill to include financial-aid hike

Even if your mom didn't respond to pleas to send money, rest easy — local representatives did.

The Kansas Legislature — led by Reps. Kent Glasscock and Jeff Peterson and Sen. Lana Oleen, all Republicans from Manhattan — passed a budget proposal to Gov. Bill Graves on Friday that included a hike in financial aid available to K-State students.

While this bump in aid will not completely offset next year's surge in tuition rates, it will be enough to soften the blow for many students.

Other than financial-aid availability, the budget closely parallels the one set out by Graves in January.

It includes money to implement the planned restructuring of higher education and to increase faculty salaries.

Although K-State will receive slightly less than expected — $20,000 total — the increase in financial aid makes the discrepancy worthwhile to students.

Although state representatives are often overlooked, their role in the lives of K-State students is quite significant.

This most recent decision reveals this.

Students should thank these individuals for paying attention to them when budget allocations roll around, despite the fact that students show up in limited numbers when election time rolls around.

Glasscock, Peterson and Oleen should be commended for their commitment to looking out for K-State students.

Their dedication to ensuring that students in need can seek financial aid is much appreciated.

After all, Mom doesn't always have extra cash to send.

Biochemistry professor corrects inaccuracies about Ackert additions

Editor,

There was an article in the Collegian on April 5 about preparations for the addition — Ackert II? — to Ackert Hall. With groundbreaking ceremonies planned for this week, it is appropriate to correct some inaccuracies.

There will be no increase in teaching laboratory space. The Department of Biochemistry has four teaching labs now, and there will be four in Ackert II. Moreover, there will be one laboratory bench less in each lab.

There was a reference in the article to vacated space in King, Leasure and Burt halls resulting from moves by biology and biochemistry. I can't speak for biology, but we have five productive faculty with research labs and the Biotechnology Core Facility in Burt, and they will still be there after the rest of the department moves from Willard Hall and the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building to Ackert II. Furthermore, neither biology nor biochemistry has space in King, and I know chemistry has no intention of moving from King.

It was strange to describe how important it is for graduate students to work in research labs with an added implication that they will get "even more hands-on experience." We have good graduate students who pursue research with vigor and great success under excellent guidance by dedicated faculty, and this is true whether they function in the almost-new facilities of the Chemistry/Biochemistry building or the aging facilities of Burt and Willard.

There will be enhancements of biochemistry in Ackert II, including consolidation of NMR instrumentation and associated office and lab space into new adjacent facilities.

The departmental administrative offices will be brought together.

Faculty from three buildings will occupy only two buildings.

There will be increased office and computer work spaces for graduate students and post-doctoral associates.

We hope the new environment of Ackert II will be an inspiration, but we don't intend to postpone our ambitions in research and teaching until it exists.

Hey, Roney. You fell off of your soap box. Are you OK?

Leave it up to the Collegian to have a distasteful article about the student that was killed. I'm repulsed.

For the idiot who didn't know whose views "Our Review" represents: Directly above the Campus Fourum on Tuesday's paper says, "Our View: An article selected and debated by the editorial board is written after a majority opinion is formed. Greeks' silence on hazing sanctions tarnishes image Fraternities, sororities should strive for more open solution to problems

It's just not a good time to be greek.

We've all been members of groups. We've all been painted with the same brush people would use to mark the worst member of that group. For example, there's around a hundred people who work at the Collegian. Sometimes we — brace yourself — make mistakes. Often they're trivial oversights by one or two people. But it doesn't reflect poorly on just one or two people — each of us contributes, each of us loses something when the weakest link in our chain buckles.

Therefore, when something does go wrong, there should be ample reinforcement that you should plunge your face through a plate-glass window before you ever make that mistake again, buster. Believe me, we get plenty of that here — we've got bleeding eardrums to prove it. Most of us — not the paper, but us in general — take an inherent sense of pride in our accomplishments, our status. We don't like seeing that pride tarnished by those who have also achieved it and seem intent on contaminating it.

Eventually you get to that point where image does matter: where what people think of you — how they perceive you — affects everything you and your group does.

Re-enter the greek — and where should we start?

Let's jump back to February 1999 for some context. Delta Delta Delta pleaded guilty to violating the Greek Affairs hazing policy, and after requests from the Collegian, Jennifer Kassebaum, associate university attorney, released letters detailing both the allegations and the punishments imposed. This was despite Greek Affairs adviser Barb Robel's perception that, had the information not been released, the general public would have assumed that the greek system was serious about enforcing its own anti-hazing initiatives. "Everyone knew that action was taken," Robel said, oh, 14 months and change ago.

This is enough for me. Never mind that the punishment sounds like something you get in sixth grade for mouthing off to a teacher: "Write 100 words on why it's not good to mouth off to your teacher." Uh-huh. And what lesson do you learn? Do you really learn respect for your teacher? No, you learn to do it a little quieter next time and just wait until she turns around so you can plant a salamander on her desk. Rant aside, the fact that Tri-Delta was punished, records of such available, encouraged many. The system seemed to be working.

Quick, jump to December, and witness the new greek order.

Phi Gamma Delta fraternity pleaded guilty to allegations of substance abuse and human-rights code violations before the Interfraternity Council.

Fiji offered its own sanctions, which IFC amended. Neither charges nor sanctions are revealed.

Hard to gauge how well the system works when it actively keeps you in the dark, isn't it?

Two months later, Delta Tau Delta pleaded guilty to violations of the anti-hazing policy. Charges? Sanctions? Delt president Jeff McKasson wouldn't talk about those. But he did clarify matters with a written statement.

McKasson's statement read in part, "The ruling of the Judicial Board on Feb. 11, 2000, is just and fair. Delta Tau Delta agrees with the sanctions that are placed upon us, and we have every intention to abide by these sanctions."

Of course, keeping in mind that we were never told what the charges were, nor even the sanctions, that's a laughably inane statement. Things happened, you know, and we're going to be punished. We'll write an essay or two. In pencil.

ADAM HAYES/Collegian

I can understand if greeks feel a tinge of shame when they get dogged in print, be it baseless allegations, guilty verdicts or simple criticism (file this column under the latter, I guess).

But how is perpetuating a code of silence that would make the NYPD blush with respect helpful? Which would you rather be — a system that feverishly and efficiently defends its own rule-breaking misfit brethren with silence and legal legerdemain and appear to all the world to be a conspiracy of hazing-happy harpies, or would you rather root out the few paddle-crazy malignancies and embrace the image of trying to make your system better?

How can the best members of the greek system stand the silence? Worse, how can they perpetuate it?

Last year, the IFC Board of Directors sanctioned Acacia fraternity for five years after four hazing violations, three substance-abuse violations, two human-rights violations and a partridge in a pear tree. (Oops, ixnay the pear tree and roosting bird. Got carried away.) That's an impressive list of accomplishments you don't see aside from the occasional sports team. IFC president Mike Goodpasture seemed to understand that snapping that weak link was the best thing for the greek system. "We're here to ensure the safety of incoming freshmen, and this is an extremely positive step for that," he said.

Less than a year later, though, Acacia applied for readmittance to the IFC, and they're being supported by the IFC Board of Directors.

Why? Well, they've got a new mission statement, you see, and they have a governance model for the Acacia board.

That's the IFC equivalent of a 500-word paper.

And now we know that one year is actually five IFC years. Imagine going to school for 20 IFC years. Scary, isn't it?

This is not about Acacia, not about Fiji, not about Tri-Delta.

This is about the fact that when the greek system responds to inquiries with nothing but silence, we are left to take our assumptions on faith — on faith that the greeks policing themselves are of the highest possible integrity and are capable of adequately representing the greek community.

In five IFC days, it'll be Thursday.

I think Barb Robel, back when she was talking to reporters, said it best. "In the eyes of the general public, all greek letters are the same. They are hard to distinguish. Any incident involving greek letters impacts them all concerning public image."

Does the greek community of this campus want to shelter its miscreants with silence or is it really serious about creating the best social and educational system for its members?

I know the silent majority. I've worked with you. I've taught you in my class. You deserve better than this. Weed out the chaff and you will bloom.

Student Senate needs constructive input from all its constituents

GUEST VIEWPOINT
CARLTON GETZ

Travis Weigel's column on Friday, "Outgoing SGA only maintained status quo; new members need to take initiative," serves as an excellent example of the challenges that face Student Senate and Student Governing Association.

These are not the challenges of representing students well or breaking the "status quo" to pursue "drastic change;" rather, they are the challenges of remaining dedicated in an environment where criticism without constructive input is plentiful and misinformation is rampant.

Weigel is right in saying that improved communication is one of the greatest challenges Senate faces: we obviously have been unable to eliminate misinformation from his arsenal of criticisms to level.

Let us examine Weigel's assertion "[Senate] did manage to raise our fees yet again."

The implication of "again" is that Senate raises student fees regularly. In the last term, Senate did raise fees by an astounding 3 percent (slightly higher than the current rate of inflation on consumer products). This increase came after four consecutive years during which student fees remained constant at $251 per semester.

As a result, students have benefited from Senate's efforts to maintain a level student fee: adjusted for inflation, students today actually pay only $231.89 per semester, an effective reduction of nearly 8 percent. Senate does not have a recent record of student fee increases, nor does Weigel seem to pay close attention to his tuition bills.

Yet more importantly than slight stabs at policy or Senate's activities, Weigel's column emphasizes one of the most serious problems facing Senate: a lack of constructive input from students in general. While Weigel readily asserts that Senate has failed to "take the initiative to bring about drastic change on campus" and that "students no longer just want change, they are demanding it," nowhere in his column does Weigel specify exactly what those changes are or make any suggestions of what needs to change.

Senate is not the Psychic Network, and barring input from students, Senate must struggle with the information it has: the perception of what students want and, more importantly, the input of the few students who care enough to come to the meetings to present their ideas and suggestions.

Vague assertions without substance behind them, such as filled his column, do not yield progress.

If Weigel truly wanted to make a fair and balanced criticism of Senate or SGA, he first would get his facts right and then proceed to making clear, concise recommendations of what he views as important changes our campus requires.

Criticizing an organization on past activities without offering a suggested guide for future action does not help Student Senate achieve its objectives of representing students.

Instead, we probably all should commend Student Senate for maintaining its enthusiasm and dedication through unproductive criticism of this sort.

Colbert Hills' prices higher

■ New rates for city's PGA Tour-caliber golf course highest in area; students, faculty receive discount.

By RICHARD SMITH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan-area golf buffs inspired by golf tournaments like last week-end's Masters tournament will soon have a chance to try out their best Vijay Singh impressions.

The only catch is it might cost a bit more than they're used to.

The fee rates for Colbert Hills, the state-of-the-art, PGA Tour-caliber golf course expected to open in early May, clock in higher than any other 18-hole courses in the area.

Colbert Hills director of golf operations and general manager David Gourlay said Colbert Hills will feature an all-inclusive fee of $59 for 18 holes of golf Monday through Thursday, and $70 on weekends, with some discounts available based on tee times and K-State affiliation.

"The fee includes green fees, your cart and the driving range," Gourlay said.

The fee also stands to come down a bit for K-State students, faculty and staff, who will receive a 25-percent discount, and for alumni, who will receive a 15-percent discount. A stand-by rate of $35 Monday through Thursday and $45 on weekends will also be available to those willing to cross their fingers that a scheduled group misses their tee time.

Still, the figures are higher than other area courses such as Stagg Hill and Rolling Meadows. Stagg Hill, located in Manhattan, charges $11.50 for nine holes and $17.50 for 18. There is no student discount, and golf carts are not included.

Rolling Meadows, located near Junction City, costs $10 during the week and $15 on weekends for all-day golfing privileges, again with golf carts and other perks excluded. Both courses feature lower rates during the evenings. Gourlay said that the higher costs at Colbert Hills were due to the excellence of the course, which was recently rated the Wooldridge steps up recruiting efforts

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State head basketball coach Jim Wooldridge has been busy lately. He was hired as the new men's head basketball coach at K-State last month and has been on the recruiting trail ever since. Today is signing day for the Cats, and Wooldridge has been out trying to nail down players for his first recruiting class.

The school has two scholarships available, and guard Galen Morrison is working out with the team, K-State Assistant Sports Information Director Craig Pinkerton said.

Pinkerton also said he is unsure when the Cats will make official announcements on their recruits.

Wooldridge has also been busy assembling a staff of tested coaches as assistants. On Tuesday, Wooldridge announced the hiring of Jimmy Elgas as an administrative assistant.

"Jimmy brings an expertise that K-State will benefit from," Wooldridge said. "His experience level and enthusiasm for the game of basketball is unmatched."

Elgas is a native of Crystal Lake, Ill., and he spent five seasons as an assistant coach at Southwest Texas State, associate head coach Mike Miller said. Under Miller, Elgas served as the recruiting coordinator and worked with the school in areas such as scheduling, on-floor coaching and coordinating practice and workout schedules.

He spent five seasons at Southwest Texas, and before that was an assistant coach at Lincoln College.

Draft consumes fans' beings at expense of sunshine, sanity

You're probably noticing a special feeling in the air lately, right? You know — the sun shines bright, the birds are singing, the trees are in bloom, and spring has sprung — that whole thing. Yes, friends, for most of the country, spring time is the most wonderful time of the year.

For most of the country. But while you and the rest of Manhattan are out leading healthy, well-adjusted lives, I'll be shunning such empty pursuits in favor of a higher calling this weekend. Fresh air and exercise be damned. I'll be barricaded in my place, door locked, blinds shut, phone unplugged, glued to my couch with the good book in one hand, and the remote control in the other, listening with rapt attention to the marvelous predictions of a shiny-haired man who brings me insight.

Billy Graham, you ask? Oh, no, my friend. This weekend all of my spiritual guidance will be coming from the words and writings of Mel Kiper Jr.

Yes, it's NFL Draft time again — that magical time of year when red-blooded American football junkies like myself forsake family, friends and careers to spend 18 consecutive hours watching real-live footage of middle-aged men drinking coffee and trying to make decisions. This won't be confused with "America's Most Dangerous Car Chases."

Without a doubt, of all my sporting obsessions, my draft mania is easily the most ridiculous, and certainly the most difficult to explain to friends and concerned onlookers. Unless you have lived and died for the

Clark's faith in non-regular players confirmed in 16-0 win over NALA foe

ABOVE: Josh Cavender hobbles a pop-up on the infield during the fifth inning of Tuesday's game. Cavender received an error on the play. INSET: Ryan Noel (left), junior in pre-professional elementary education, Jason Nicklaus (right bottom), facility assistant for the Intercollegiate Athletic Agency, and Dave Temple (right top), facility worker for the Intercollegiate Athletic Agency, right top, watch the Wildcats' baseball game against Bethany College from the scoreboard, where they were working. The Wildcats kept them busy, scoring 16 runs in 6 innings to defeat Bethany 16-0.

K-State head baseball coach Mike Clark wasn't sure how some of his non-regular players would respond to seeing game-time action against Bethany on Tuesday.

K-State notched its first shutout of the season in a 16-0, seven-inning defeat of the Swedes, a victory that answered Clark's uncertainty.

"They did a good job. I'm real happy with the way we approached things," Clark said. "We jumped out to a big lead, which allowed us to stay very liberal in our substitution. We got two, three at-bats for guys that needed the at-bats. It was real rewarding to see those guys have some position things happen to them."

Sophomore outfielder Collin Yoachim went 2-for-3 with two runs scored and three RBIs after appearing in 11 games so far this season. Junior outfielder Chris Nelson went 2-for-2 at the plate, boosting his average .32 points to .212, while freshman outfielder Joey Ammirato raised his average .33 points to .170 after a 2-for-2 day.

The Wildcats (12-20, 3-14) scored four runs in each of the first three innings, followed by single-run tallies in the fourth and fifth, and two runs in the sixth to finish the game.

Junior shortstop Graham McAllister led the game off by being hit by a pitch and was followed by Yoachim, who singled. Sophomore designated hitter Pat Maloney walked to load the bases before senior first baseman Mark English singled to score McAllister and Yoachim. After junior second baseman J.D. Loudabarger flied out to advance Maloney to third, junior outfielder Bentson Olen grounded out to score Maloney. Greg English got a free pass to third on a wild pitch and eventually stole home to give the Wildcats a 4-0 lead.

The second and third innings were similar to the first in that the Cats batted around in the first two innings and sent eight to the plate in the third. K-State also managed to put its leadoff man on base in each inning except the sixth, en route to hammering Bethany pitching for 16 hits.

Freshman pitcher Derek Ver Helst was a late scratch with freshman English (1-0) getting the start instead — just his third appearance as a Wildcat. He threw four innings of shutout ball, while giving up four hits, striking out two and walking none, to pick up the win.

Ver Helst, who is coming back from an injury, came on in the fifth and threw two innings, striking out three and walking one before junior Scott Tallman closed out the game in the seventh.

"Greg was super — he went out and threw strikes," Clark said. "In seven innings we only walked one batter, which is fantastic, and we got a lot of ground balls. The guys did what they needed to do and what we needed them to do to be successful."

KSU baseball bats pounding oppositions' pitchers

By SAM STIERS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's baseball team has devastated opposing pitching lately.

In their past three games, the Cats have scored 15 and 14 runs against Oklahoma State and 16 against Bethany College.

The Cats only have three seniors on the squad and the team has struggled with consistency. Hitting coach Robbie Moen said the players are starting to understand the process of hitting.

"Our guys are doing a good job now of getting good pitches to hit — we're getting ourselves into hitter's counts, and when you do that you're able to be more aggressive," Moen said.

Moen said patience has had a lot to do with the Cats' surging offense.

"It makes the pitcher throw more pitches, and the more pitches he throws, the better looks our guys get," Moen said. "They have a better idea of how a pitcher's stuff breaks and moves and the different speeds he throws."

The Cats drew 10 walks against Bethany and had 16 hits. However, K-State only had two extra base hits. K-State's head coach Mike Clark said the team's offense doesn't rely on power.

"We're not a home run hitting team," Clark said.

"We're a first-to-third, steal-a-base, bunt-and-run, hit-and-run kind of team, and right now we're doing that well."

Clark said there are two keys to the Cats' recent offensive barrage.

"I think using the whole field has been a big thing," Clark said. "We're hitting the ball well to all fields. Plus, when we get two strikes we're not panicking. We're staying patient. Our strike outs are down and our walks are up. Our players are hitting their pitch, not the pitcher's pitch."

K-State's whole team is getting involved. Thirteen K-State players reached base in Tuesday's game, and Moen said the team's confidence is building.

"I don't want to jump the gun, and I don't want to get too excited, but I love to watch lots and lots of runs being put up," Moen said.

Clark said the players are continuing to show progress and that if they continue to stay focused, their offensive resurgence will continue.

"Our guys out in the field today said 'that's three in a row' so I think everybody's starting to feel good about themselves and about each other, and you've got to have that if you're going to be successful at this level," Clark said.

New linebackers provide hope, questions

By RICHARD SMITH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

During the era of head coach Bill Snyder, K-State fans have always been able to count on one thing. Every season, through graduations, assistant coaching changes, rain, sleet and snow, the Wildcats have always had star-caliber players at the linebacker position.

But with the turning of a new century, the Cats are entering new territory. Brooks Barta, Percell Gaskins, DeShawn Fogle, Travis Ochs, Jeff Kelly and Mark Simoneau are all gone. Snyder's supply line of proven stars has run out. K-State now must cobble together a linebacking corps from a group of players that has more questions than Regis Philbin but also the potential to yield an NFL millionaire or two.

There is little question that junior and returning starter Ben Leber will be one of K-State's defensive leaders. As last year's middle linebacker, Leber finished fourth on the squad in tackles. The only conundrum is from which spot he will make plays in the 2000 campaign. Leber has experience at strong-side linebacker as well and is slated to move there as spring football begins.

After Leber, assembling the rest of the starters is something akin to putting together a jigsaw puzzle. There are plenty of viable pieces — it's just a matter of finding the ones that fit together.

"We need to find the right mix at the linebacker position," Snyder said. "There are a number of possibilities of how that might play out. We're going to try to find the three best that we can."

"We need to develop some play-makers within the confines of our defense."

For the moment, at least, Turrelle Williams will be the man in the middle of K-State's defense next season. Injuries and a surplus of talented players have made the senior an afterthought the past two seasons, in which he has recorded only 17 tackles.

However, a little-known fact is that Williams had reduced eventual All-American (and current Atlanta Falcon) Kelly to a cheerleader in 1997, starting the first two games of the season before a knee injury thrust his understudy into the limelight.

Williams will have to be in top form, however, to hold off a stiff spring challenge from Terry Pierce. A hulking, 6-foot-3-inch, 250-pound redshirt freshman, Pierce looks the part at middle linebacker and has rewritten K-State's weightlifting records, splitting the team's overachiever award this season with defensive end Andrew Shull. Now the only question is whether Pierce can master K-State's schemes in time to vault into starting contention.

At weak-side linebacker, an odd couple of sorts will duel for the chance to replace Simoneau. One contestant is proven senior Jason Kazar. The former special teams demon has "linebacker" written all over him, from his 6-foot, 220-pound frame to his flat-top haircut and no-nonsense demeanor.

The other option is redshirt freshman Josh Buhl. The 6-foot, 190-pound linebacker lacks size and experience. However, he makes up for it with a 4.45 40-yard dash time and enough confidence to believe he's ready to make the No. 7 jersey a top seller again among K-State fans. "People keep saying, 'Oh, you've got Michael Bishop's number,'" Buhl said. "There's going to be a lot of people with that jersey on. But it's just time for me to take it on for a new role and put it on defense."

"Hopefully after next year, I can do that. There'll be no more Bishop, it will be Buhl."

The possibilities don't end there, either. Senior Warren Lott and sophomore Andy Klocke also are considered possibilities for significant playing time.

The man responsible for sorting through this mess, linebackers coach Jim Gush, intends to exhaust every possible option in assembling his starters.

"All the positions are basically open," Gush said. "I think we've got a good mix of young talent. Our goal going into the spring is developing our best two-deep, regardless of position. There will be some guys moving around."

Leber, possibly the youngest elder statesman in K-State defensive history, believes that despite the uncertainty surrounding them, there is potential to be tapped in K-State's linebacking corps.

"It just needs some polishing," Leber said. "We've got to find some chemistry and just play."

love of a football team before, unless John Elway has made you cry, it's very difficult to see any appeal whatsoever in the NFL Draft.

The draft lasts longer than some Chinese dynasties. Nothing happens except talking, and occasional thoughtful chin scratching. Not a thing. No one is physically playing. In fact, no one moves much. I'm not sure that Tom Coughlin even breathes. As the moments stretch endlessly into infinity, I spend each one haunted by the cold reality that no matter which running back the Chiefs select, he'll be bagging groceries alongside Harvey Williams in two years.

But still I watch. Every. Single. Second. Because, maybe more than any pass, catch or run on any autumn Sunday, NFL success is created here, by astute moves in the draft. And when you're a long-suffering Chiefs fan like I am, you want desperately to be waiting there with open arms if success ever arrives.

It's a great day for the average football fan, because on draft weekend, every team is a playoff contender, even the New Orleans Saints. Every quarterback taken is the next Troy Aikman, not someone who will be paid $5 million per year to model baseball caps and wear a headset. The name Tommy Maddox is never spoken.

Every general manager is the next Bill Walsh — happily wheeling and dealing his team closer to Super Bowl contention with every brilliant move. That is, every GM except Bill Walsh himself, who will spend the day cursing fate (or the bet he lost) for bringing him back to the hapless, cap-strapped 49ers. Either way, the name Mike Ditka is never spoken.

Smiley, happy feelings abound. It's a bigger love fest than a Promise Keepers rally. Coaches are happy about the player they got. Players are happy about the team they got. GM's are happy got the guy with the 4.4 40-time instead of the 4.5 40-time, all while dodging the guy with three DUI convictions. Agents are happy because they're only a training camp holdout away from buying that summer home. Even Chris Berman gets choked up from time to time.

At home, soaking it all in, sharing the sunny glow of all the unfounded optimism, are people like me. Once football season starts, I'll get to endure all the popular jokes about the Chiefs. There will be plenty of time to watch as next year's wonder kids (My pick? Washington Redskins) cruise to a Super Bowl victory. For this weekend, though, a Super Bowl visit for my Chiefs seems almost close enough to taste.

It's a chance for all of us long-suffering fans to feel buoyed by hope. We get to feel what it's like for our favorite team to succeed at something. And therein lies the appeal. For one day, we all get to be winners.

Think what you will of the NFL Draft. Scoff if you will, ignore it and live your lives if you must. But for 24 hours this weekend, the NFL's haves and have-nots will all stand equal in their quest for the Lombardi trophy. Sure, it may not be the most glamorous of afternoons, but for some of us, it's not a bad little day-dream to have.

most challenging course in Kansas.

"If this course were built anywhere but in Manhattan, I have to say it would probably cost you $125 to $165 to play," Gourlay said. "It's not like any other golf course you see in Kansas. It's one you would see on the PGA Tour."

The course was assigned a rating of 77.5 and a slope, or challenge level relative to other courses, of 152.

Those figures show Colbert Hills to actually be more challenging than the storied Augusta National Golf Course, home of the Masters, something Gourlay said speaks well of the course's design.

"I have to think Colbert Hills will surpass anything that has been in Kansas before and will be comparable to any of the courses you'll see on the PGA Tour," Gourlay said. "They could put a PGA event out there tomorrow and it would be equally as challenging as the best course played by the pros."

But the construction costs of high-caliber course mean that if you want to play like the pros, you'll have to pay like the pros — hence the high fees.

Gourlay said one option for K-Staters not willing to drop $50 plus on a round of golf would be the nine-hole, par-three practice course located on the site.

A round of nine will cost $9, and all-day access to the nine-hole course will run only $15.

Reptile exhibit invades Union Courtyard

By JUSTIN SCHUSTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People walking through the construction jungle at the K-State Student Union on Tuesday afternoon might have mistaken it for an episode of "The Crocodile Hunter."

The Union Program Council's Outdoor Adventure Committee sponsored Herps Alive from 12 p.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Courtyard as a part of Outdoor Awareness Week.

The event was an opportunity to handle and examine a variety of reptiles and amphibians.

Keith Gisser, a herpetologist and the event's exhibitor, answered the audience's questions throughout the afternoon. He also assisted onlookers in handling the animals.

Herps Alive travels throughout the country putting on about 150 to 175 shows a year at about 100 to 120 locations, Gisser said.

Gisser said his show exposes people to animals that many have not yet had a chance to see.

"The big thing is education, getting people to get rid of their fear," Gisser said. "All of a sudden, they're not just yucky lizards."

The program features animals such as the bearded dragon, the American alligator and the pac-man frog. Gisser also showed about 15 different types of snakes and nine types of turtles.

Onlookers viewed the animals through 14 glass cases that set on tables in the middle of the courtyard. The cases had open lids, allowing easy access for people wanting to handle the reptiles.

Some people turned away from the animals, while others, especially children, eagerly grasped the creatures in their hands.

Many people were brave enough to handle an albino Burmese python named Pandora. Jeff Hansen, senior in graphic design, hung the 8-foot-long yellow and white animal from his shoulders.

"I thought it would be creepy, but it was all right," Hansen said. "I want one of my own."

Martha Hackney brought her children all the way from south of Flush, Kan., to see the show.

"It's really fun," Hackney said. "It's nice to have it available."

Hackney asked Gisser what snakes would make good pets. She said she has no problem getting her children a pet snake if that is what they're interested in.

Zack Kahler, a 12-year-old from Kansas City, Mo., said the carpet python is his favorite snake. He already has three snakes of his own: a Brazilian rainbow boa, a Kenya sand boa and an albino gopher snake.

"We came to look at the snakes because we enjoy collecting and learning about them," Kahler said.

Daniel Smalley, also a 12-year-old from Kansas City, Mo., said he had to miss school on Tuesday to come with his friend Kahler. He said he also has a snake, a Solomon Island ground boa, which his mother barely let him have.

"I begged her for six months to let me get it," Smalley said.

Minefield claims lives; NATO's efforts helpless

By ALEXANDAR S. DRAGICEVIC
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Helpless to save her, NATO peacekeepers and townspeople watched from the edge of a minefield as a dying 11-year-old girl waved and pleaded for hours to be rescued.

Ema Alic and two other youngsters died Monday after venturing into the minefield on the outskirts of the capital, the latest casualties of the Bosnian war that ended five years ago.

"For two hours, the girl was showing signs of life, waved with her little hand and called for help. Then she went quiet," said eyewitness Nenad Krestalica, 67, who was still visibly upset Tuesday.

His wife, Stana, said she was gardening when she heard the explosion.

"We all started running. We heard a child's voice screaming for help," she said. "We called the police and they came, but nobody could approach the children."

Police identified the other dead children as Goran Bisevic, 12, and Haris Balicevac, 12.

As the rescue team carried the bodies of the children from the minefield, Ema's father broke into tears, turned around and told his wife: "It's our child," other witnesses recalled. The woman fainted.

The presence of the minefield was well-known, and signs warned of danger, residents said. Still, the field was not taped off, apparently because of lack of money.

Dozens of people are killed and injured every month in explosions of some of the millions of land mines strewn across Bosnia. Minefields render large areas along the former front line unusable.

Residents gathered around the minefield after the explosion Monday, followed by Italian members of the NATO-led peacekeeping force, but they could only watch the tragedy a few hundred yards away.

Although the experts worked quickly once on the scene, more than 2 1/2 hours elapsed between the time a demining team was notified and the time it reached the victims. By then, all three children were dead.

"It didn't take us more than half an hour to demine a small path to get to the children," said Zoran Gagula, one of the deminers. "We skipped standard procedures, risked our lives, and still, by the time we got to the children, they were dead."

Standard demining procedures are slow, with experts sometimes taking as much as an hour per square yard to minimize risk, prodding each inch of terrain for explosive devices.

NATO experts arrived after a team from Norwegian People's Aid and therefore let that squad do the demining, said a NATO spokesman, Maj. Paul Hubbard.

"Winning the Goldwater will help these students in competing for spots in graduate schools," Powers said. "We are looking for students who have succeeded in a challenging curriculum, and somebody who has an in-depth interest in one of the three areas has shown that."

Powers said students who have a minimum 3.0 grade point average, a major in math, science or engineering and research experience are eligible to apply. Students also are commonly involved in other campus activities. However, she said research is the prime factor.

"The research component is very important," Powers said. "This shows that the students are willing to go above and beyond and go more in-depth in their major. It is evidence of a real commitment to science, math or engineering."

Russell said she was happy when she learned she had received the Goldwater. She said she hopes to do research in the pharmaceuticals industry or cancer research after graduate school, and that she has received a lot of experience at K-State that will help her reach that goal.

"This is what interests me in my future career," Russell said. "I am getting my feet wet and receiving good experience so that I can get into a good graduate school later."

Keller said he was excited when he found out he was selected as a Goldwater recipient. He said it will benefit him both by helping him finance his last year in school and assist in his application and admittance to medical school.

"By relieving my financial pressure next year, it will allow me to concentrate more fully on my studies as well as give me some extra free time," Keller said. "I am proud that I am helping to carry on the K-State tradition in winning these scholarships."

Powers said the strong representation of K-State students receiving Goldwater scholarships is partially due to the interests of students in the three designated areas. She also said the research opportunities for undergraduates are abundant at the university — something not common at a lot of public universities.

K-State is ranked first among public universities in the number of Goldwater scholarships received. Among all colleges and universities, K-State ranks third, with only Princeton and Harvard universities having produced more Goldwater scholars.

"K-State students show a great deal of interest in getting involved in the many research opportunities here," Powers said. "Our departments provide research opportunities for undergraduates, and the same students excel in challenging science, math and engineering classes."

Russell said she thinks the combination of the departments and the faculty is one of the main reasons for the success the university has had in producing Goldwater recipients.

"The departments have good research opportunities for undergraduates and are pushing the students into the research labs," Russell said. "The advisers also know what the committee is looking for on the applications and will help students with what they need to do well in the competition."

Keller said he wants to go through the Medical Scientist Training Program after graduation and would like to work in academic medicine or become a doctor/researcher. He said he thinks K-State has had success in the Goldwater program because of the faculty, advisers and administration, and their promotion of the program.

"If students interact with the staff at K-State, they will find that nearly everyone is willing to help them with whatever they need," Keller said. "The administration is also a huge factor in promoting our successes in these competitions so that bright, new students want to come to K-State to be a part of this."

Gas-tax rollback killed in Senate by 17 votesBy CURT ANDERSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A temporary federal gas tax cut was resoundingly defeated by the Senate, where opponents said its meager benefits for motorists funding over high fuel prices wasn't worth jeopardizing money for critical transportation projects.

"Yes, there's anger at the pump. That's understandable," Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said Tuesday. "But there's also anger behind the wheel. We cannot have instability in our highway modernization program."

By 17 votes, the Senate failed to reach the 60-vote threshold necessary to cut off debate and proceed to the bill, effectively killing it. Twelve Republicans and 44 Democrats voted against the measure, sponsored by Majority Leader Trent Lott, who was backed by 43 Republicans.

The vote was the first of many on tax issues that Republican congressional leaders scheduled for this week to highlight their tax-cutting priorities in these final days of the income tax filing season.

The House unanimously approved legislation Tuesday that created new taxpayer rights and gave people breaks from IRS penalties and interest. The Senate also began debate on a 10-year, $248 billion income tax cut for married couples, including 25 million two-earner couples who pay more taxes than they would if they were single.

The gas-tax bill would have rolled back 4.3 cents of the federal gas tax for the rest of the year and suspended the entire 18.4-cent tax if average prices exceed $2 a gallon. The issue has lost some of its steam as the gas-tax price rise has slowed and oil-producing nations agreed to increase their output.

Despite the bill's defeat, Lott said the gas-tax debate demonstrated the U.S. failure to address its dependence on foreign oil and the effect that has on consumers and the economy. Many Republicans also repeatedly referred to the 4.3-cent tax as the "Gore tax," because the vice president broke a tie vote in 1993 to approve it.

"When all of this is said and done, we're still going to be dependent," Lott said. "This is not over. We need to do something."

Opponents of the tax rollback, however, said the relief wouldn't amount to much for the average motorist, even if it were passed along by the oil companies.

They said it would jeopardize $6 billion a year for transportation projects, even though Lott said the bill would use surplus dollars to make up the losses.

In a symbolic vote, the House also signaled opposition by 420-1 to the tax increases in President Clinton's fiscal 2001 budget. Democrats derided that effort as a political stunt intended only to embarrass the president and curry favor with voters.

"You have to wonder if this isn't some form of electioneering, instead of substantive tax policy," Rep. Jim McDermott, D-Wash., said.

PLANNERS

Herbers said the team was evaluated on six points of their financial plan.

"We had to figure out our current financial position, how they stood at that current time, educational goals, retirement goals, estate planning goals, protection and risk management and income tax planning," she said.

An additional section to the invitation included a "Jeopardy!" style question-and-answer session used to test the students' overall financial knowledge. K-State placed fourth in this portion of the contest, Grable said.

Herbers said the invitational would help the members of her team tremendously after graduation.

"American Express has opened a lot of doors for us as students and proved their value in finding good recruits for their company," she said. "There are potential job offers with not only American Express but other organizations at the competition."

The biggest benefit of the competition would be the fact that potential employers are now aware of the strength of the K-State program, Grable said, with team members receiving multiple job offers just 20 minutes after the competition's winners were announced.

ners were announced.

"Not too many people knew we even had a program, but now K-State is on the map as far as financial planning. We're now known as the best financial planning program in the country," he said. "On the academic side, this is the equivalent of winning the NCAA Tournament."

"Thanks to this contest, we can now place all our students in paid internships around the country."

'Picnic' emphasizes effects of Small town Suffocation on average Kansans

STORY AND PHOTOS BY REED DUNN

Inge play emulates struggles, everyday life of small Midwest town

Tonight, the cast is having a picnic. Thursday, the cast will open "Picnic."

Erin Fast, junior in theater, will be portraying the character of Madge in the K-State Theatre presentation of William Inge's "Picnic." Fast said the cast has worked to gain a feel for one another and has scheduled events outside of rehearsal to get to know one another.

"We really wanted a sense of ensemble. I think we really tried to become close as a group," Fast said. "On Wednesday, we are going on a real picnic together."

Fast said she also has gone on mock dates with Jason Kipp, sophomore in biology, to establish a background with him. Kipp plays Alan, Madge's boyfriend.

The story of "Picnic" is based in Independence, Kan. Lew Shelton, director of the production, said the story focuses on teenage rebellion.

"I think it's going to be a fun play. I don't think people think of 'Picnic' as a fun play, but there's a lot of humor in it," Shelton said. "I think we're going to recognize ourselves in this play. We are going to recognize there are some elements of humanity and human longing."

Aubrey Kershner, senior in theater and public relations, said the play is about the struggle for people to escape their lives and the thrill of escape. She said people who grew up in Kansas, especially in a small town, will be able to relate to the story.

"It just really appealed to me, because it is a good story about Kansas," Kershner said. "It shows the suffocating aspect of a small town."

Kershner plays the part of Flo in the production. Her character is Madge's mother, which she said was one of the biggest challenges in preparing for the character.

"This character has been a huge challenge for me," she said. "She's a mother, and I have to relate to my peers as my children."

Learning about the character of Hal was something that Casey Jackson, junior in secondary education, said he did mostly through cast readings.

"Just going through the script and seeing what other people said about me, about Hal, gave me a really good feel for the character," he said.

Fast said it also was a challenge for her to portray her character. Madge is the pretty older sister who was crowned queen of the Independence Neewollah celebration.

"It was really hard for me to put a contemplative side to her. I got to the point where she really doesn't like being pretty," Fast said. "It was such a challenge for me, because I didn't want to come off as a "Picnic" will run from April 13-15 and April 19-22 at Nichols Theatre. Tickets for the show are $6 for students and seniors and $9 for the public. They are available at the McCain Box Office.

superficial character."

As far as following the truth about living in the Midwest, Jackson said Inge did a good job. Inge was originally from Independence, and Jackson said he might have related the play to growing up in the area.

"The script fits really well, and it was really well-written, except he writes that liquor was against the law in this state, but it wasn't at that time," Jackson said.

"Maybe he was relating to his childhood, but I don't know."

Fast said she encourages everyone to attend a performance of "Picnic."

"I would suggest anyone should come and see it. It's set in Kansas, and people can relate to that," she said. "It has a good plot, too. It will get them thinking about what the play is and what it means."

Virginia troupe to perform Shakespeare play

By JAINA K. STUTHEIT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Shenandoah Shakespeare Express, a traveling acting troupe from Virginia, will perform Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing" at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the Manhattan City Auditorium, 1101 Poyntz.

Penny Senften, volunteer at the Manhattan Arts Center, said the 12-member troupe has been together since 1988 and tours across the United States and Canada.

"The actors are young, all between the ages of 20 and 30," Senften said. "They are very high-energy. They make Shakespeare very approachable, and they are good at connecting with the audience."

Senften said the group performs its shows just as Shakespeare's troupe would have performed them, on a bare stage with the audience and actors sharing the same light.

"The stage is set up in thrust form, which means the audience is on three sides of the stage, rather than facing the stage straight on," Senften said.

Senften also said the actors play multiple roles, like they did in Shakespeare's time.

"Back then, women were played by men or boys," she said. "Likewise, this group has men play women, but they also have women play men."

Senften said she likes that the group makes Shakespeare seem less stuffy.

"Many people who have studied Shakespeare in school get the idea that his work is a bit stuffy, but this group makes it fun," she said.

Don Hedrick, professor of English, said Shenandoah Shakespeare Express is popular among students and has performed at K-State several times.

"I have never heard of anyone who didn't enjoy one of their shows," he said.

Hedrick said he encourages anyone who has not seen the group to go see them in action.

"If anyone wants to try Shakespeare, this is the best time to try it," Hedrick said.

Linda Uthoff, drama director at Manhattan High west campus, said she and her students did a workshop with the troupe a couple of years ago.

"My students had a good time, and they learned a lot about acting Shakespeare," Uthoff said.

"They taught the kids that Shakespeare can be fun. They broke it down for them so that Shakespeare doesn't seem so intimidating."

Uthoff said she likes the youth and energy of the group and hopes people who have not previously seen them will go to the performance.

"They are very energetic, they wear contemporary costumes and aren't afraid to switch genders when acting," she said.

Tickets are $8 for the general public and $5 for students, and are available at the Manhattan Arts Center, Streetside Records and at the door.

Historian loses libel suit over Holocaust in London court

By JILL LAWLESS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Historian David Irving, who has outraged survivors of Nazi death camps by challenging the scope of the Holocaust, on Tuesday lost the libel suit that he launched to save his academic reputation.

Irving sued American scholar Deborah Lipstadt and her publisher, Penguin Books, in Britain's High Court.

He said their 1994 book branded him a "Holocaust denier" and accused him of distorting the truth of what happened in Adolf Hitler's Nazi Germany.

The verdict was greeted in near-silence by a courtroom packed with Holocaust survivors and others.

"The decision proves that David Irving is a falsifier of history," said Eldred Tabachnik, president of the Board of Deputies of British Jews.

"Although the Holocaust itself was not an issue at the trial, we welcome the fact that attempts to manipulate the truth about the tragic events of that time have been shown to be baseless."

Irving, whose books include "Hitler's War," said he does not deny Jews were killed by the Nazis, but challenges the number and manner of Jewish concentration camp deaths.

He said that after the publication of Lipstadt's book, "Denying the Holocaust: The Growing Assault on Truth and Memory," his academic work was increasingly shunned by publishers and agents.

Under British law, Lipstadt and Penguin were not able to rely solely on truth as a defense.

But Judge Charles Gray said Irving failed to prove his reputation had been damaged and called him "anti-Semitic and racist."

"Irving has for his own ideological reasons persistently and deliberately misrepresented and manipulated historical evidence," the judge said.

"He has portrayed Hitler in an unwarrantedly favorable light, principally in relation to his attitude towards and responsibility for the treatment of the Jews," he said.

Jewish groups expressed relief at the verdict against Irving, 62.

The Simon Wiesenthal Center, a Los Angeles-based movement dedicated to victims of the Nazis, hailed the verdict as a victory of history over hate.

"David Irving's career as a historian is over," the center said in a statement. "Today's decision definitely places Irving where he belongs — not as a historian, but as a leading apologist for those who seek to whitewash the most heinous crime in human history."

Shortly before the ruling, Irving said that whatever the outcome "my reputation is bound to be enhanced because of my ability to stand up to the experts ... to take them all on single-handed."

He said he will not appeal. He faces legal costs of $3.2 million for Lipstadt and Penguin's lawyers, Britain's Press Association news agency said.

Irving, who represented himself during the nine-week, nonjury trial, is not new to controversy. His comments — some made while addressing neo-Nazi groups — have drawn fire from Jewish organizations around the world, and he has been banned from Germany, Canada and Australia.

Irving told the court he had been the victim of a 30-year international campaign to destroy his reputation "as a human being, as an historian of integrity."

Richard Rampton, the lawyer representing Penguin and Lipstadt, who holds the Dorot Chair in Modern Jewish and Holocaust Studies at Emory University in Atlanta, said during the trial that Irving perpetuated falsifications "for the sake of a bogus rehabilitation of Hitler and dissemination of virulent anti-Semitic propaganda."

Irving said he had made some "mistakes of copying, mistakes of omission," but said he corrected those errors.

He said rather than deny the Holocaust, he drew attention to significant aspects of the tragedy.

Irving questioned the use of large-scale gas chambers to exterminate the Jews, and said the numbers of those who perished are far lower than those generally accepted.

He said most Jews who died at Auschwitz did so from diseases such as typhus, not gas poisoning.

In a sign of the international outrage directed at Irving, Israel even agreed to release the previously secret memoirs of Nazi war criminal Adolf Eichmann for use by Lipstadt and Penguin's legal team, saying it was morally obliged to help them.

In the 1,300 handwritten pages penned in an Israeli prison, Eichmann plays down his own role in the mass killing but also provides methodical descriptions of the genocide, including timetables of death transports.
